Ross Center Dedication Day

"Greater and greater being impressed upon us is the idea of simple living. We should shepherd our resources and have more to give for the Kingdom of God.

"I challenge you that our lives should be governed by biblical principles, our lives should be in close harmony with the environment and lived to make society better through the using of our resources to the highest value.

"Give God the glory for all He has done."

—Milo C. Ross
October 20, 1978

The newest building at George Fox College is the Milo C. Ross Center (left) dedicated Oct. 20. Board Chairman Eugene Coffin unveils a portrait of Milo Ross and his wife Alice as President David LeShana speaks. Ross (center below) responded in a short address to the approximately 200 persons gathered in front of the new $1.3 million complex housing the Fine Arts and Religion Divisions.

The building is a "recycling" of the former Hester Gymnasium and members of the Thomas W. Hester family (lower left corner) were on hand for unveiling of the remembrance plaque. They included Hester's son Homer and his wife Olive and their daughter Meredith (left), and son Ralph and his wife Rosa.

Dedication Day activities also included a morning convocation featuring James Houston, president (principal) of Regent College in Vancouver, B.C., and an evening of music including a flute/harp-sichord recital with faculty members Chris Lauinger and David Howard.

With the challenge to live "so that the world will be better because we have been here," former George Fox President Milo Ross Oct. 20 acknowledged the naming of the college's newest building in his honor.

Ross's comments came in 25-minute dedication ceremonies outside the new $1.3 million Milo C. Ross Center, a new home for the college's music and religion departments.

About 200 persons gathered under an overcast sky to participate in the noon-hour program, part of a series of events that marked the dedication day. The building is the fifth new one on the campus in two years and a sixth is under construction, all with a total investment of nearly $6 million.

Ross, who resigned in 1969 after 15 years as president, acknowledged the changing of the former Hester Gymnasium into the new Ross Center through a total renovation. "We live in a world of change," he said. "All of value comes from change and we become better by it."

George Fox Board Chairman Eugene Coffin called the audience members "loving witnesses," saying they were "attending a wedding of the department of music and the department of religion."

"Generations to come will show fruit of this marriage," he said. Coffin, chaplain of the Garden Grove Community Church in California, called the opening of the Ross Center "a vision that is coming to a reality." He dedicated the building to the glory of God.

President David Le Shana, who presided over the ceremonies, presented Ross and his wife Alice with a framed, color picture of the new building bearing their name.

Coffin and Le Shana also unveiled a bronze plaque to be mounted beside the new Thomas Hester Choral Room, honoring the man for whom Hester Gym was named. The plaque notes his 27 years of service on the George Fox board of trustees, 10 years as chairman, a role he held at his death in 1943. The plaque also indicates the new Ross Center is a total "recycling" of the former gymnasium structure, which served for 30 years.

On hand for the plaque unveiling were Hester's sons, Homer of Newberg and Ralph of Olympia, Wash., and their families.

Also unveiled was a large portrait of the Rosses to be hung in the new building.

The day opened with a 9:30 a.m. convocation featuring James Houston, principal (president) of Regent College in Vancouver, B.C. He told the students, faculty and guests that "who we are and what we are are more important than what we do."

Dedication activity continued in the evening with mini-concerts featuring the GFC choir, band and professors Chris Lauinger and David Howard on the flute and at the harp-sichord. The final event was a piano concert by visiting artist Istvan Nadas.

Television Project

Construction is underway on George Fox College's new $170,000 television production studio. And the innovative program now has its first administrator.

The project is designed as a pilot program to test the feasibility of producing and marketing on the national level educational videotape cassettes for screening on home television sets.

Funding for the total $250,000 project is from the M. J. Murdock Charitable Trust of Vancouver, Wash.

The one-and-a-half-story video center is being constructed at North Meridian and East North streets on property purchased for the project. The land is an extension northward of the present campus. A house on the location was razed.

Project contractor is Kent Konstruction, Newberg. Architect for the 46- by 60-foot facility is Donald Lindgren, AIA, Vancouver, Wash.

The new building will be constructed of "giant brick" with an appearance to match architecture of recent campus construction. The college has completed five other new buildings in two years.

Construction completion for the new 2,700-square-foot building is expected by Jan. 1.

Included in the new complex will be offices, reception area, audio and video control rooms, storage, and a recording studio with a 12-foot ceiling.

The project involves $67,000 for actual building construction, $20,000 for land purchase, $3,000 for furnishings, and $80,000 for television recording and production equipment.

Mel Schroeder, former director of media research for the Church of the Nazarene national organization, based in Kansas City, Mo., is heading the new television project.

Schroeder began duties Sept. 1 and has the title Director of the Murdock Project.

Schroeder, born in Salem, Ore., has been coordinator of the Nazarene World Mission Video Network, director of denominational Religious Education Television Productions and instructor in radio and television classes at Nazarene Theological seminary in Kansas City.

In 1977 Schroeder, 42, researched and developed a worldwide video-cassette network using the Betamax format, working with Sony Co. The network eventually will have 75 to 100 video cassette units in about 60 countries to help tie together missionaries in the Nazarene denominational organization.

Schroeder, who has a master's degree in curriculum development and studied television at San Jose State University, spent nine years, until 1974, at Northwest Nazarene College (Idaho) in media work.

At George Fox the new television system also will be available on campus. Tapes produced in the new video center will be available through the campus media center. Whole courses or segments of them will be televised and recorded on tape for playback at any time.

Included in the Murdock grant is funding for a closed circuit television system on campus. The grant also provides for salaries in addition to the new director. A technical assistant, graphic artist, marketing specialist, and secretaries are to be hired, and stipends will be available for George Fox faculty helping develop and instruct the courses to be recorded.

The videotape cassettes are designed to be used in home video equipment systems placed on the market two years ago. Tapes for courses and classes could be stored for repeated use at convenient times. They also will be designed for persons seeking personal enrichment and for persons needing how-to instruction in a variety of areas. Handicapped persons also are expected to benefit from the cassettes.

"It's time to carry education outside the college and university center to the home and community, to churches and to business and industrial centers," says President David Le Shana. He says the program will "move the voice and image of the teacher out of the ivy-clad building to where the people are."

Growing Enrollment

George Fox College enrollment has reached 715, a new record and a 50 percent gain in five years, as the college begins its 88th year. There were 707 students a year ago.

Nearly half, 45 percent, of those enrolled are new to the campus with 324 new students and 391 returning.

The total includes 651 full-time students, and 64 taking part-time work or continuing education courses. Not included are another 77 students enrolled in independent math study courses through the college.

The 3 percent enrollment growth in full-time new students is topped by the 8.4 percent increase in students living on campus. Currently the college has 576 living in campus housing, compared to 531 a year ago.

The enrollment has nearly filled all campus housing, even though the college last fall opened two new residence halls for an additional 128 students.

By classes there are 284 freshmen, 157 sophomores (including one consortium visitor), 118 juniors, 119 seniors (including joint degree students) and 37 unclassified, including continuing education enrollment.

Economic Boost

George Fox College will give the surrounding Newberg area an economic boost this school year of nearly $2.8 million.

A survey by the Office of College Relations shows students estimate they spent $533,000 with Newberg businesses during the last school year, at the rate of $755 each.

Added to a payroll for faculty and staff of $1.5 million and direct college spending of $600,000, the college in the 1977-78 fiscal year gave the Newberg community an economic boost of about $2.6 million.

This year, based on a conservative 6 percent inflation factor and with no increase in students, the total impact on the community should be $2.75 million. With additional students and higher faculty salaries, the total could even be higher.

The impact compares to a 1976 estimate of $2 million in college-related local spending.

The student spending survey involved questioning of one fourth of the college's students. They were asked to complete a 31-point questionnaire that specifically asked for Newberg city spending, eliminating on-campus purchases or buying in hometowns or in the nearby Portland area.

George Fox students spent $66,676 a month for the eight months on campus in Newberg, the survey showed. The compilation showed a major difference in spending between single students in residence halls and married students. Single students reported spending an average of $75 a month and $600 a year with downtown merchants. That gave $48,376 a month to the local economy and $387,000 a year.

Married students averaged $300 a month and $2,400 a year in expenses locally, bringing $18,300 a month to merchants and $146,400 a year.

The bulk of the spending in Newberg is for food purchased from grocery stores and supermarkets and from drive-ins and restaurants. For restaurant owners the boost was $45,700 a year, and for the food stores it means an income of more than $76,000 each year. Newberg businesses take in more than $122,000 a year from students buying food.

Transportation is another costly item for students. Single students said they spent about $60.48 a year for gasoline and oil products, while married students indicated they averaged $215 a year.

Entertainment and recreation also rank high in spending, with single students reporting expenditures of $3.75 a month ($30.08 a year) at theaters, bowling and swimming. Married students average $2.98 a month ($23.84 a year) in entertainment, according to the survey.

The total spending does not include "indirect" effects, including George Fox dollars spent in the community, which are in turn respent in Newberg by local business and residents, or money spent by out-of-town visitors to the college.

Taking the "Chamber of Commerce Rule of Thumb" that funds turn over five times during a year, that $2.8 million in college spending this year becomes $14 million of general economic activity within the Newberg area economy.

LAUINGER CHESS CHAMPION

Chris Lauinger, a George Fox College music professor, for the third straight year is Oregon Women's Chess champion.

With four wins and a draw in the two days of competition, Mrs. Lauinger earned 4½ points to four for Debbie Kitchen of Corvallis who last won the Oregon title in 1975. Mrs. Lauinger and Ms. Kitchen, the highest rated player going into the competition, drew in their match in the third round.

Mrs. Lauinger, the 1977 Northwest Women's Chess champion, with the winning of the Oregon title, is again eligible for the Northwest competition to be held in Oregon, Washington or British Columbia next spring.

Mrs. Lauinger teaches music theory at George Fox. Her husband, Robert, also is a member of the music faculty. She renewed her chess interest five years ago after quitting for 17 years after playing it as a child and in college. She has taught on a part-time basis at George Fox since 1963.

ROBERTS SPEAKS IN ENGLAND

George Fox College religion and philosophy professor Arthur O. Roberts spent the first part of October at a conference in England.

Roberts met with a committee to recommend goals, directions and priorities for Friends World Committee, a consultative body that provides information, services and interpretation for Quakers worldwide. The meeting was in London.

The committee is composed of about a dozen persons from different countries.

While in England Roberts also spoke at Woodbrooke, a Quaker educational center.

A George Fox professor since 1953, Roberts currently is on a one-term sabbatical for research, travel and preparation for a new book.

Memories Of Long Ago

Walking to classes in heavy leggings, passing secret notes in required study hall, and boy pranksters in the belfry are all recalled in a new booklet describing the early years of George Fox College.

Newberg resident Daisy Read has written a small booklet "My College: Memories of Long Ago." It tells of her experiences between 1907 and 1914, when the college was named Pacific.

Although not commissioned by the college, officials found out about the manuscript, had it published, and it's now on sale ($1 each) through the college's Alumni Association.

"One thing I dreaded in walking was the long, high trestle we had to cross," Mrs. Read says. But she overcame that in walking with 30 to 40 schoolmates each day from her home in the Springbrook area, about two miles from campus.

"We could not attend much that went on at the college, as the roads were so bad we were liable to get in a bad rut in the dark and break a buggy wheel," Mrs. Read says of her early days at home.

When the day arrived to attend the academy (discontinued in the 1930s) Mrs. Read had helped pay for her college education by picking prunes and berries and working in a cannery. "My mother got out an old dress of hers and cut out the strongest pieces of the dress and made me my best dress to wear," Mrs. Read writes. "I wore it the first winter with many cleanings through the year. I was so careful with it, changing it as soon as I got home to my third best dress."

Using a sharp memory for details Mrs. Read details the first campus play, days and times for graduation, and even menus for meals.

Mrs. Read also discusses the campus food—still much discussed by today's college students. "The women in this area [Newberg] used to can fruit and vegetables during the summer to be used in the dormitory. They also dried corn, apples and prunes. Fresh vegetables and fruit also were brought in by some of the farmers. When someone butchered, fresh pork sausage and hams would sometimes find their way to Canyon Hall for a change in diet," she writes.

Mrs. Read details the time students went to chapel and "there was an awful smell in the auditorium." Chapel was dismissed. "No one could imagine what had happened," she says, and "it was disclosed finally that the smell was coming from under the platform. Someone had put some hydrochloric acid to generating and it sure was generating!"

Also on the early college campus President Kelsey (1908-1910) expelled one of the young men. Some of the other young men were provoked and climbed into the belfry (no longer on campus) and stayed there three or four days. "When chapel time came they would ring the bell so loud we could not have chapel; President Kelsey finally reinstated the young man," Mrs. Read reports.

Mrs. Read enrolled at the academy in 1907. After completing her academy (high school) education in 1910 she enrolled that fall in college-level courses, graduating in 1914 from Pacific (renamed George Fox in 1949) with a bachelor of arts degree in education. She had completed seven years living, studying, playing and working on the campus.

Later she taught in primary grades in Oregon for 41 years, 34 of those in the Portland Public School system, where she taught first grade before retiring in 1958.

An avid local historian, Mrs. Read also has written the booklet "Springbrook—A Cooperative Community—Then and Now," calling upon her years of living there.

Currently she resides in Friendsview Manor, a retirement center just across the street from the college campus she has loved and now has written about.

Out of The Ivory Tower

The often-heard charge that professors are isolated in their ivory towers on campus was knocked down this summer by George Fox College professors who volunteered to spend from 5 to 10 weeks "out in the field."

The professors experienced life in business and industry and on the mission field, hoping to come back with a better idea of what they should tell their students about applying their college education in a practical way.

Through a $125,000, four-year grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation, the college has established a faculty internship program that allows faculty members to spend part of their summer, with pay, in a working life off campus.

"I'm not saying we're unique in this; but I don't know of any other college that's doing this," says program director Curt Loewen. "We're hoping to bridge the theoretical to the practical," he says.

The overall program has two parts. This summer more than 150 students also were involved in field experience programs, using their education directly in related fields while holding summer jobs.

The Kellogg program is designed as a major effort to relate liberal arts education directly to career preparation with on-the-job skills related to the academic disciplines.

Loewen can cite numerous examples of professors off campus. Chemistry professor Paul Chamberlin spent 10 weeks working in a chemical testing lab for a firm in Portland; Herman Hughes, director of George Fox teacher education, spent five weeks in the Newberg School District, working at every level from teaching grade school classes to spending time in the superintendent's office.

English professor Sam Sherrill spent five weeks in the Portland area contacting business and industry employers about the needs for liberal arts/English majors.

Another English professor, Ed Higgins, last year spent the summer as a reporter for the McMinnville News Register, learning how English is applied and used daily.

And this summer history professor Ralph Beebe spent five weeks in Jackson, Miss., working at the Voice of Calvary Ministries, with work experience ranging from paper work behind a desk to digging ditches for other mission workers.

Practical use of drama was learned by Darlene Graves as she spent 10 weeks in a variety of community and church theater and drama workshop activities, including work with the Newberg area Chehalem Park and Recreation District.

"We want our professors—and therefore our students—to know that there can be practical careers from a liberal arts curriculum," says Loewen. He says one of the best ways of doing this is to have the professor get the actual on-the-job experience so that the work needs can be related during the academic year to the student.

"They [the professors] come back with a whole new sense of the significance of liberal arts and how to relate it," Loewen reports.

Participants in the program are screened by a Field Education Committee following application. They receive up to $165 a week while on the summer job. If they also receive a salary from the firm, that is over and above the Kellogg-fund stipend.

President David Le Shana says the college views the experiential education program as an opportunity for the college "to meet its moral commitment to the student who looks to the college for practical results of his or her training."

"A college must not limit itself or be limited by campus boundaries in providing experiences with the greatest impact or relevance," Le Shana says. "We believe that liberal arts education includes the interaction of theory and practice."

He sees the Kellogg program as providing relevance to the career-oriented students while not forsaking the strength of the broad background in liberal arts. "We believe this program results in young people being capable of meeting future national needs," he adds.

Hawaii Holiday

If the sounds of splashing warm tropical seas and the sight of palm trees and sunny beaches in midwinter appeal to you, then a week in Hawaii with George Fox College friends may be what you need.

The one-week Hawaii Holiday begins January 8 with departure from Portland direct to Honolulu. Participants will stay in Waikiki.

The trip includes seven days in the islands, a George Fox College Dinner on Jan. 11, and four basketball games as the GFC Bruins face Hawaii Pacific College (Jan. 9 and 10) in Honolulu and Brigham Young—Hawaii (Jan. 12 and 13) in Laie. Tickets for the games and the GFC dinner luau cost are included in the tour price.

Also included is ground transportation from the airport to hotels, and from hotels to the games and the GFC Dinner. Return is Monday, Jan. 15, to Portland.

The cost is $266.62 for round-trip air transportation via Continental Airlines, and $238 for the Kalia Hotel (basis two sharing a room). Another hotel room allotment has been filled already.

The midwinter break for a time of leisure and sight-seeing is being arranged by the college in cooperation with Northwest Educational Travel Service, Inc., 811 S.W. Sixth Ave., Suite 915, Portland, OR 97204, telephone 503/227-2541.

Further information on how you may join the basketball Bruins, Coach Sam Willard and George Fox friends is available from NETS or through the Office of College Relations.

Bruin Basketball

George Fox College will go after its eighth NAIA District 2 basketball playoff appearance in nine sessions in a 29-game slate that includes a week in Hawaii.

The Bruins will play the second year in the new Wheeler Sports Center with 13 games at home, including their first Christmas season basketball tournament.

The Bruins open their season with the District 2 Tip-Off Nov. 30 at Linfield College. The regular season starts Dec. 6.

The schedule takes the Bruins to Hawaii starting Jan. 8 as they meet Hawaii Pacific College and Brigham Young University-Hawaii with two games against each. Both are new NAIA District 2 schools.

The new tournament Dec. 21-22, tentatively titled the "Bruin Classic," will involve eight teams—four college and four area high school teams.

Along with the host Bruins will be Central Washington State College, College of Idaho, and Oregon College of Education. High school squads include Newberg, North Salem, South Albany and Aloha.

Central Washington is on the schedule for the first time. And the Bruins face two NCAA contests with a home-and-home series with Seattle Pacific University. All games but the Central and SPU contests this season will be with NAIA District 2 teams.

During the season the Bruins will meet four Northwest Conference teams—Linfield, Willamette, Lewis and Clark and Pacific—each twice. There is a home-and-home matchup with Eastern Oregon of the Evergreen Conference, and the Bruins will challenge three other district independent colleges: Western Baptist, Warner Pacific and Northwest Nazarene, each to be met twice in the season.

In the coming season George Fox will play in 10 cities in four states with 16 games on the road. All home games will start at 7:30 p.m., including the Homecoming contest, which previously has been starting at 8 p.m.

Coach Sam Willard, starting his third season with the Bruins, will have six returning lettermen and some top Northwest recruits as the Bruins begin the 1978-79 campaign.

There are some major changes as the George Fox College women's basketball team begins its season Dec. 8.

On hand will be a new coach, and the season is nearly one third longer in games and is starting a month earlier than last year.

Kirk Burgess, a senior member of last year's men's team and completing his student teaching fall term, will take over coaching duties, along with Dee Bright.

The schedule of 22 games compares to 16 a year ago. And the Dec. 8 opening date compares to a Jan. 13 start last season.

The Bruin women are hoping for a better season than their 1-15 mark last year. And their hopes will be built around the return of senior Kim Johnson, selected last season to the Women's Conference of Independent Colleges All-Star first team. Also returning will be Jo Wester, Lois Hantho, Brenda Bagley and Joanie Snyder.

Twenty-two women signed up for preseason practice in mid-October for the official start of practice Nov. 20. Preseason games this year include the Willamette University Tip-Off Dec. 8 and 9, a prevacation game Dec. 15 with Eastern Washington State College, being met for the first time, and a Jan. 8 contest with the University of Alaska—Fairbanks. WCIC play starts Jan. 18, again at Willamette.
