Dear Reader,

As you're glancing at this particular page, we encourage you to sit in a comfortable place. If you desire to take this a step further, put your feet up and be still.

There's something beautiful in moments like this. It's not necessarily about the moment itself being worth anything out of the ordinary – it's about taking time to intentionally notice what's around you. When this happens, you allow it to become sacred, you allow it to change you.

What you're holding in your hands is a product of The Student Collective – the George Fox community. We, the creative team behind this endeavor, have a deep seated love for this place and trust us when we say it's not a blind love. We see the faults, we understand its imperfections, but if anything, amidst any reason our hearts have to be unsettled, we can speak truthfully and say we are all deeply grateful for George Fox University.

In all sincerity, we never intended for this to replace the yearbook. If anything, the thought was solely to create an outlet for artistically-minded students who are passionate about the university and desire to show this affection through a holistic lens of simplicity and creativity. However, things inevitably grow and change and we are thankful for the unexpected opportunity to take part in capturing these moments.

So, with that, we trust as you read the following pages (and scan for photos of yourself and friends), you'll not only take time to think of what directly pertains to you in this particular year and skip over the rest. Instead, sink deeply into the beauty around. Be immersed in the simple, yet impacting culture of our campus, our community, and the mystery of faith.

Onward,

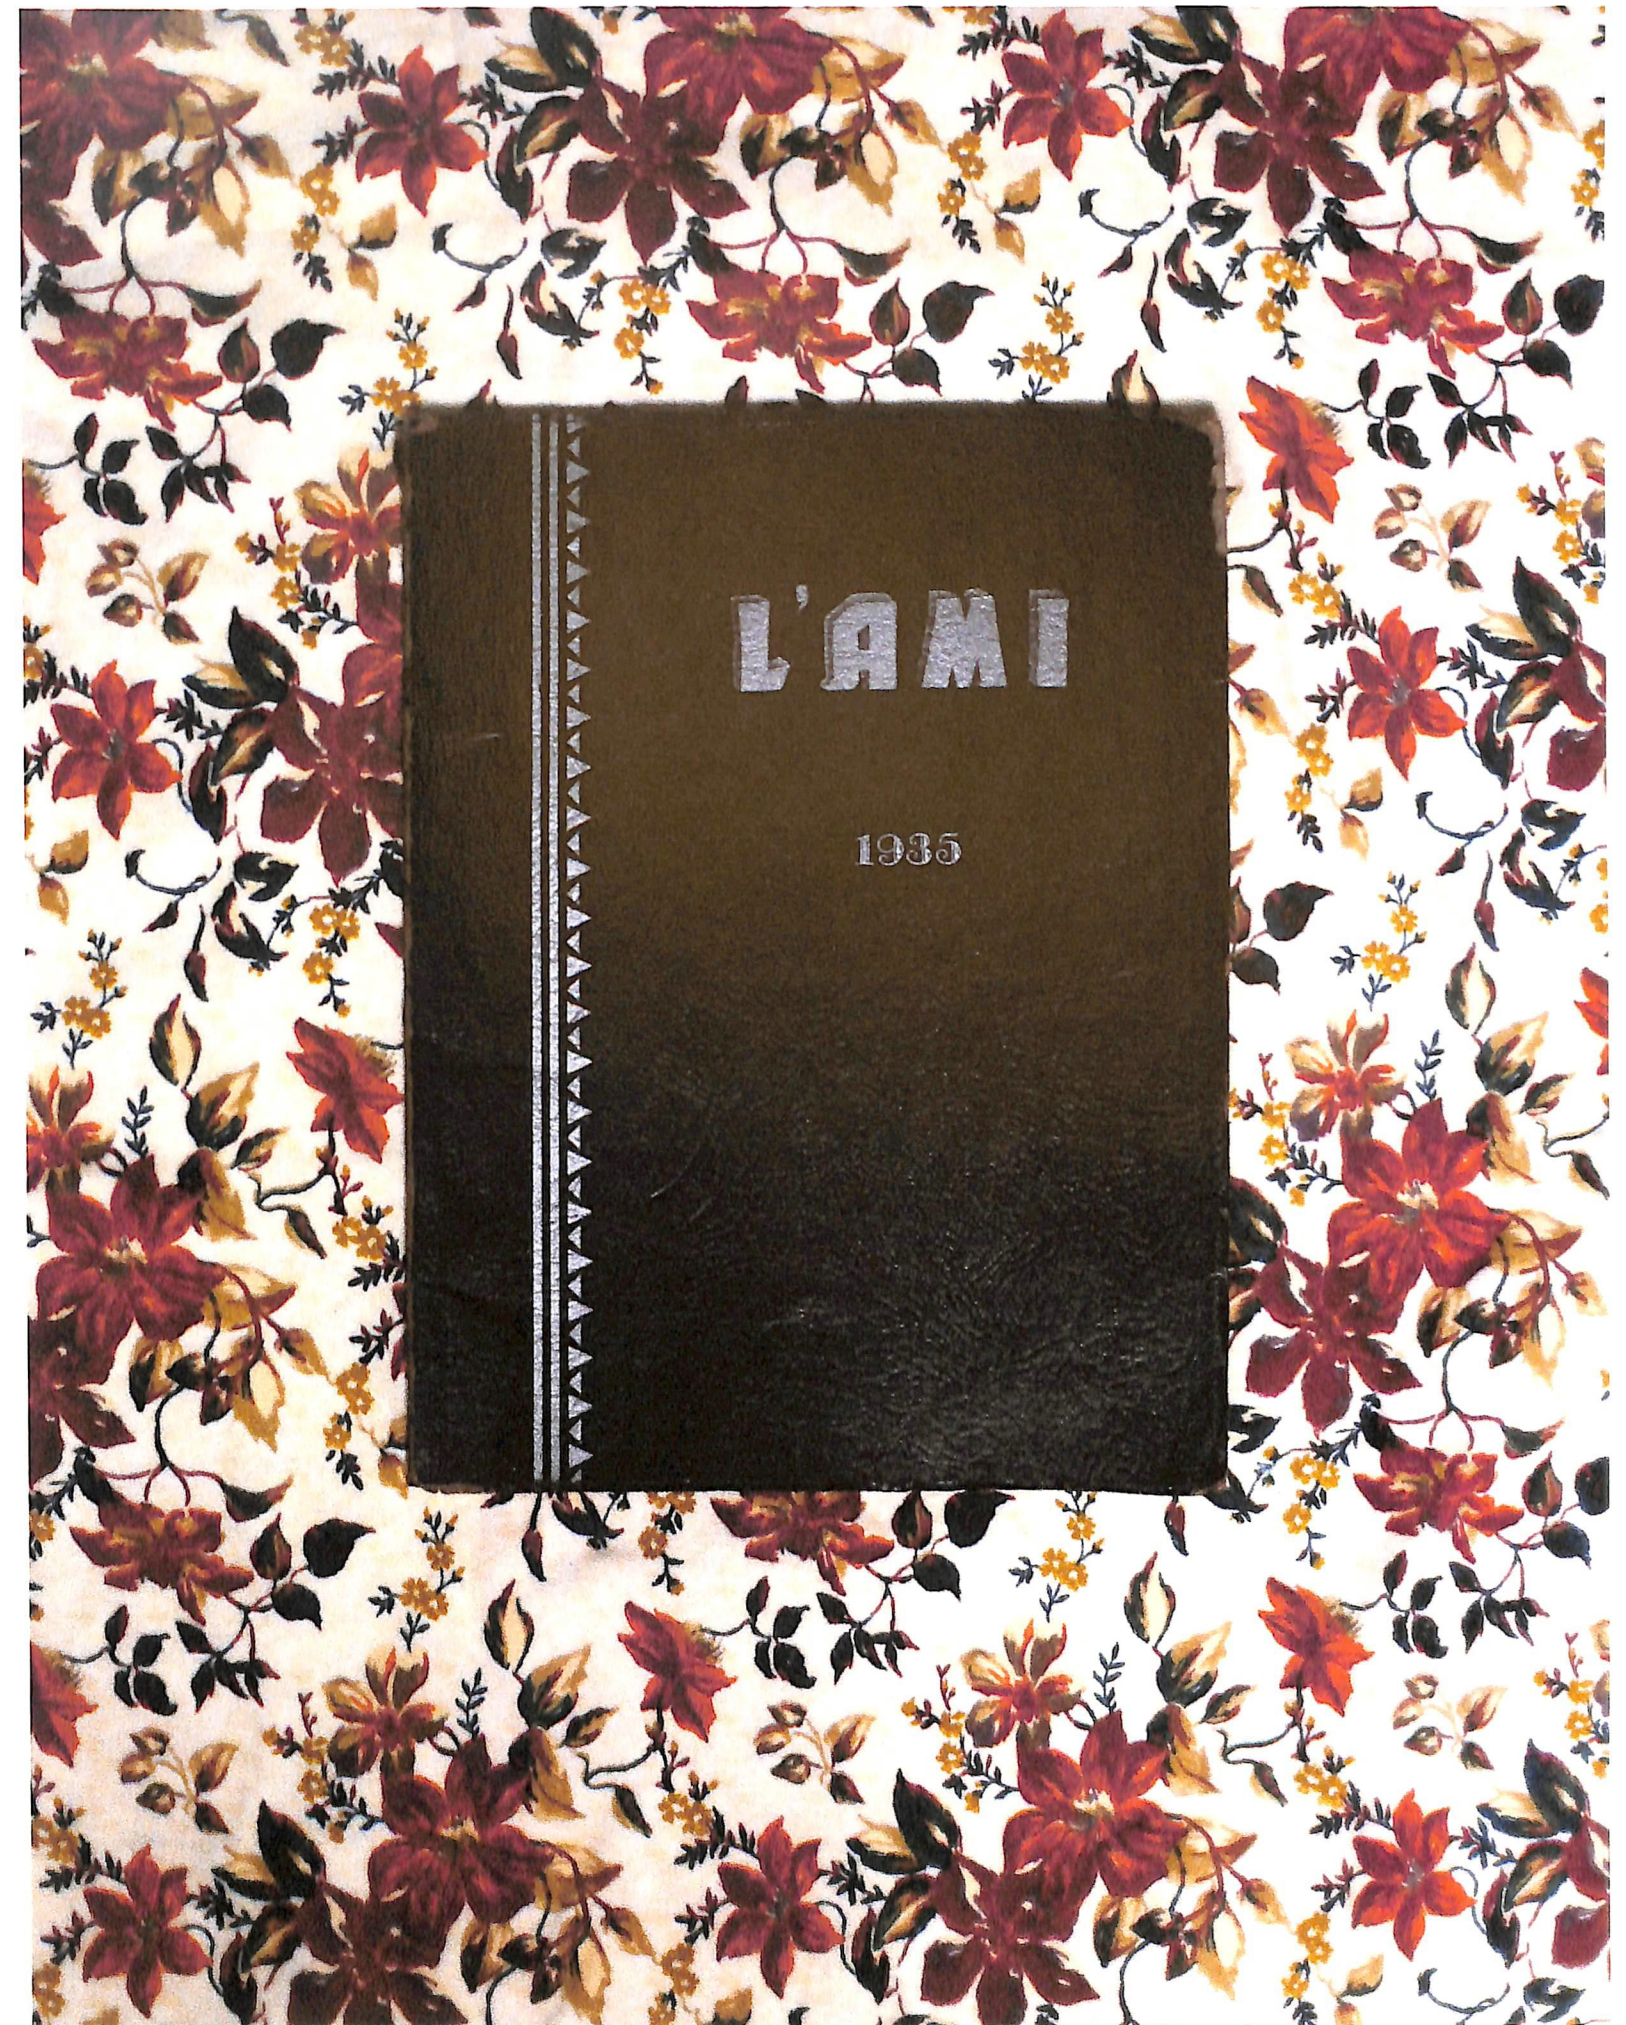

The Student Collective
Creative Team | 2013-14

Excerpt from L'ami
1935

L'ami [french] - friend; noun

"As the college strides forward in the march of progress, ever after a backward glance, she gathers, more closely around her the garments of earlier times, and clings to those blessings that survive from the beginning. If this first yearbook can harbor eventful memories of the past while serving as a guidepost for the future, its mission has been fulfilled."

AUTUMN

I am struck by the simplicity of light in the atmosphere in the autumn, as if the earth absorbed none, and out of this profusion of dazzling light came the autumnal tints.

STORY PORTRAITS I

At the core of true academic study is the ability to approach any subject with open ears and an open heart.

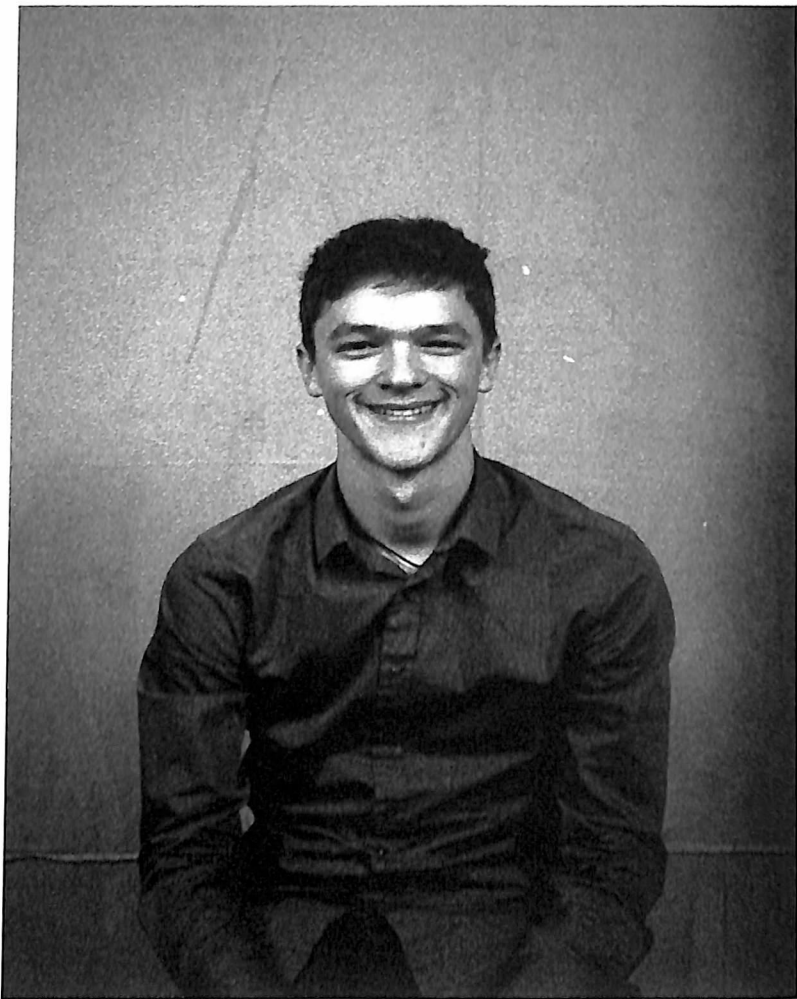

In selecting the following students, faculty worked diligently to nominate those who they felt exhibited this trait.

If anything, we hope to not only honor the nominees as individuals, but paint a holistic portrait of the George Fox community.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
It is the one major that best encompasses my interests, my talents, my experience, and my passion. And, hopefully, it will serve as a good base for studying international law in the near future. Woohoo!!
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I enjoyed learning from and with my community. I think that all of us bring something unique and valuable to the table, and I am a piece of that larger puzzle.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
We can't experience more of God without experiencing more of diversity: diversity of people, cultures, ideas, places, etc. Diversity brings not only beauty, but also many opportunities to grow and change.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
I like being myself, but if I could be someone else for a few weeks, I would probably choose a person with a good decision-making position. It would be a good opportunity to implement a couple of changes on campus.

Connor Schaefer

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I love learning about other places and cultures around the world, especially in how they relate to my own culture and experience..
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I've been involved in a number of different political/international discussion groups with students from all kinds of different disciplines. I've also been involved in groups and events meant to help American and international students come to a better understanding of one another.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I've learned how valuable it is to actively pursue meaningful friendships and relationships with all kinds of people; students, professors, church friends, and others.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
Tom Head! He's a great professor, an incredibly nice guy, and very knowledgeable and helpful.

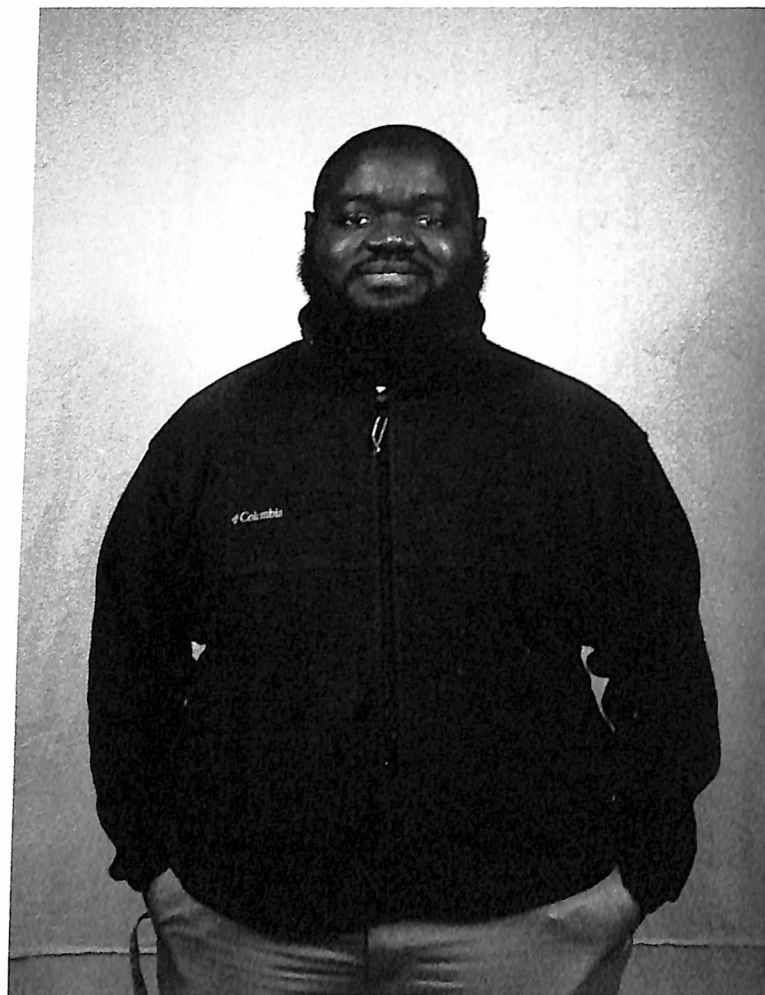

Leah Abraham

Major: Journalism

Leah Abraham

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I first declared myself as a Journalism major (print concentration) because... well... I wasn't particularly good at anything else. I wasn't even sure that I wanted to be a Journalist! But once I started to take classes and write more, I realized that this is where I belong! Journalism encompasses my love for people + innovative ideas + writing + culture + story. It makes me curious about this world and evokes a need for adventure. Thanks to this major, along with Melanie Mock's mentorship and constant encouragement, I have found so much of myself, especially as a writer.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I serve as the Arts & Culture/ Features editor for the Crescent. I'm also helping out with the Wineskin (GFU literary magazine) this year!!
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I've learned that everyone and everything has a story. It's hard to discriminate, judge, hate, and create boundaries when you take time to learn about the story. I have learned (and am still learning) to listen with an open heart and and dig deep to find the story. Never be afraid to ask the hard questions, no matter how awkward it may seem. Context always matters.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
If you don't know Monica Scigliano, co-creator of "Reggae Tuesdays," then you're missing out. Monica is fearless -- she will ask the hard/taboo questions, venture out to the unknown, notice the unnoticed, live life at the intersection of adventure and enlightenment, make room for grace and stories, and love with no boundaries. She has shown me what it means to live life wholeheartedly and see the divine in everything + everyone.

ATHLETIC TRAINING

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Because it's a combination of two of my favorite things, Sports and Medicine.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I consider myself to be a bit of a bridge builder between groups of people. I hate cliques, so I try my hardest to get people to sit together or interact with each other. "Be Known" is more than just our school's slogan to me.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

You get out of something, however much you're willing to put into it. An example would be wanting to be IN community with people around you, but not being willing to step out of your comfort zone and meet people.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Definitely Byron Shenk, one of my athletic training professors. He's smart, tells the best stories, plus dude still kicks butt in the weight room!

Elisabeth Tissell

Age: 22

Hometown: Seattle, Washington

Year in School: Senior

Major: Politics

Elisabeth Tissell

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I found myself fascinated by current events and discussions about how to solve social problems. I entered Fox as a social work major because I have always wanted to help people. I changed to politics because it was a better match for my personality and gifts. I am still eager to help people, resolve conflicts, and better the world. My focus now, however, is fixing the system rather than dealing with the consequences of its brokenness.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I led the International Justice Mission campus chapter for three years, during which time we advocated about the issue of human trafficking. I have also participated in a discussion group centered around The Economist magazine; in this group we discuss contemporary events and their implications.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

Never take people for granted.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

To be perfectly honest, I would not want to be anyone else. I do not mean this in a selfish or arrogant way. I am simply content being myself. God has blessed me with family, friends, scholarly passion, and a thoughtful heart for others. With all these blessings, what more could I desire?

Jessica Jocoy

■ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Honestly, God pointed me towards nursing. Every since I can remember I've wanted to become a veterinarian- I love animals especially cats, dogs, and ferrets. However, when I got accepted into George Fox, I didn't feel that calling anymore. Since then God has guided me in my journey through nursing school and even though there has been ups and downs, I'm glad that I have had this experience because it has helped me grow in my faith.

■ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I've been a member of the Nursing Club for 3 years and was also elected the President of the organization my senior year. In addition, I have been privileged to have been nominated by my classmates as Student Liaison my junior and senior year. Since sophomore year, I have had the opportunity to be an Anatomy & Physiology, Microbiology, Pathophysiology, Pharmacology, and Medical-Surgical teacher's assistant.

■ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

The biggest lesson that I have learned is to truly trust in God in every area of my life. I have found this to be true in my academic, social, and spiritual life and I'm still continuing to learn how to better rely on God. No matter what happens, God's plan will prevail and all will be well. One of the things that I always tell other students is that they have to take each day one day at a time just as it says in Matthew 6:34- if not, it's easier to become overwhelmed.

■ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

I would want to be Cindy Rozcicha. The moment I first met her I told myself, "I'm going to be just like her someday." Even though I have never worked side-by-side with her on a labor and delivery unit, I know without a doubt that she is an excellent nurse because her nursing care and wisdom are evident in all that she does. Cindy holds herself with a confidence and calm reassurance that I wish to possess. She is an efficient communicator, a friendly person, and effective teacher. Lastly, Cindy strives to support the Christian morals that most of our society has now dismissed. She shows her love for every person, speaks with kind words, and acts with integrity while encouraging us to do so as well.

Torrey Dooley

■ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I love people and I enjoy helping people when they need help.

■ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I am one of the older students in the program, so I tend to encourage the younger students to do their best, and to not get down on themselves when they do not receive A's on there tests. or homework.

■ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I can trust God with everything.

■ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

I would be Alejandro Ruelas. He is an awesome person and has a lot of the same values that I do. Alejandro is also a stellar student.

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I picked Computer Science because I've had a passion for computers and technology ever since I was about 6 years old. I built my first computer (on my own) when I was 12, I studied hardware design in high school, and presently own a small business that builds and repairs computers for small-medium sized businesses.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I have made several friends who are a couple years younger and have helped through a few of their classes, provided support, and even tutored them. A couple of these friends have even told me that they look up to me as an older brother. For 10+ hours a week, I work in the IT and Media Production departments at George Fox and am able to serve the community on an almost daily basis there as well.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

One of the strongest lessons that pops out at me is to never give up, and to never lose hope. During college, many students will be faced with some major hurdles in life, some much more so than others. Whatever happens though, you can't give up hope, find people you can trust, confide in them, and support each other through hardship. In the end, you will be a far stronger person for it who then later on will have experience, which you can use to help others.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

One person I greatly admire would be Mitchell Main, my roommate. Over the past few years, Mitch has helped me through a great deal of life's challenges, has always been there when I needed him, and over the years has become someone I deeply respect and look up to.

Another person would be Dakota Geil. I only met him at the start of Fall Semester of 2013, but he has quickly become a best friend. Over the past several months, he has demonstrated qualities that can only be found in real friends. He is an amazing listener, will never judge you, and is one of the most compassionate people I know.

I met Matthew Swanson within the first 15 minutes of moving into Pennington Hall during Freshman year. During these last four years, he has embraced my geekiness to no-end, and reminds me that there is always more to life than just work 24/7. He is one of the most honest and genuine friends I am pleased to have met.

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I chose to be a Theatre major, because at an early age I fell in love with the craft and ministry of storytelling. People have a very close relationship with stories. Stories reflect the human condition and play an active role in shaping who we allow ourselves to become. Theatre is an amazing vehicle through which a community can wrestle with this kind of truth together. It is pretty life-giving to be apart of that.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

It takes a lot of work, and a lot of hands to stage a production, so there have been many opportunities to get involved. I have been a TA to our Technical Director Bryan Boyd for the past three years, a cast member of University Players for two seasons, and have been in the main stage productions: A Servant of Two Master, Enchanted April, and The Game's Afoot. I have also had the chance to work as an electrician for The Broken, as the assistant stage manager for the House of Bernarda Alba, and as the house manager for Parade and am currently a member of APO. Each of these opportunities has been a great chance to work with the wonderful and hardworking people in our department-family.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I have learned that if you are Fox student, Fred Meyers becomes a bizarre twilight zone between your home life and school life. Everyone will be there. You may just zip in for bagels, but you undoubtedly run into three kids from your Bible Survey class, your first grade crush and your middle school math teacher.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

If I could be another student I would be Hailey Meekins for about 50 thousand reasons, some of which I will list: she is incredibly witty, she's great at math, she loves puzzles and can outrun me any day of the week, and she's the kind of person who brings life into a room. I look up to Hailey for her deep desire to do right by people, her incredible capacity for hard work, and her integrity. I think she's one of the most courageous, compassionate and clever people I know.

Ian Rutledge

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

When trying to decide what major to chose- I looked for what I was good at and liked. I found that I had a love for story telling and a deep passion for acting, and I felt strongly that God was calling me to study theatre.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

The theaters current production of Ken Ludwig's "The Game's Afoot or Holmes For The Holidays" is the 5th show that have acted in here at Fox and the 8th show that I have been involved with since freshman year. This year I joined the University Players (the theaters touring ministry group) and helped create our traveling show: Highway 18. I work for both the costume shop and the scene shop (where we build the sets for the shows) and am a member of the theatre honor society Alpha Psi Omega.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

We are called to be servants in what ever field we are in. So don't go after a degree with the question "how will this degree help me?" But rather "how can this training help others-through me?"

▪ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

If I could be any other member of the Fox community I would like to be Professor Bryan Boyd. His love for his craft and dedication to his students understanding is only overshadowed by his love for his family, and I am so very grateful for his example and leadership.

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I have always been passionate about history. There is nothing in the world that becomes more intriguing or mysterious than discovering how things came to be the way they are. It tends to get a bad rep and is most notably viewed as “boring”, but when it is studied, taught, and explored in the right manner, it becomes a truly fascinating study.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I began working in the history office my sophomore year. It was a great experience because I got the opportunity to make relationships with other students and faculty in the department. My senior year, I have had the opportunity to be Kerry Irish's TA for the entry level American history courses. It requires me to become very familiar with the material he teaches since I am expected to conduct study and/or tutoring sessions for the students. This has been great in expanding my knowledge about American history as well as become more familiar with the tasks and responsibilities of becoming a future educator.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

One life lesson I have learned is to take advantage of every opportunity that presents itself to you. You never know what you are capable of until you take yourself out of your comfort zone and take on responsibilities you never thought you could accomplish. Doing this also opens many other doors where more experience, partnerships, and friendships can be made.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

I would be Kerry Irish. He is one of the most intelligent humans I have ever met when it comes to America's past. He truly makes history come alive, and if you have ever taken one of his courses, you know exactly what I'm talking about.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I had a teacher in high school who sparked the interest in biology, then when I came here the people in the department sealed the deal! Their quarky flare stole my heart and have continued to foster my interest and love of the sciences.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
One of my favorite parts of our biology department is the people within. Having had a job in the department in the stockroom and prepping labs has helped me get to know students and staff that pass on through. I also have enjoyed helping out students through Sigma Zeta or Ambassadors. I hope my presence in the department is a positive one, supporting staff and students and making people feel welcome.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
How to be in community. Community is something so vital to the human experience and being able to share common interests, may it be science or music or humorous jokes, is life giving and so important!
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
I would be Amberly Vincent. She loves people so much! She shows this in her dedication to Res Life and SpiL, and to her friends and family around her. She also has great hair! Who wouldn't want that mane!

Joey Canepa

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I've always loved animals and have watched nature documentaries since I was a little kid. I originally wanted to make nature documentaries so I started out as a Biology and Cinema and Media Communications double major to pursue this, but realized this was pretty much impossible so I shifted to the Biology side of nature documentaries. Since my freshman year, I have grown to enjoy biology not just for the animal behavior and anatomy topics, but also for the cell and molecular topics. I am now considering a career in some field of health care but I am still deciding.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
I do research with Dr. Donald Powers on physiological response of hummingbirds to global climate change, I have been a lab TA for General Biology, and I work in the biology and chemistry stockrooms as lab support. In reference to the GFU community, I played drums for Spanish chapel during my freshman and sophomore year and also for the salsa dance my sophomore year.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I have learned that growing is something you do, not something that happens passively. It takes work, discipline, and an open mind to grow as a person.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
I would choose to be John Hodges because he is the most genuinely kind and humble person I have met in my entire life.

Chris Holland

Age: 21

Major: Civil Engineering

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I love building and creating things plus I'm good with math so i decided engineering was a good fit for me. I specifically chose civil because it is so important yet I feel it gets much less recognition than other areas of engineering.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I have played an integral role by working on teams, and with other colleges to understand classes. In the GFU community, my servant engineering team has helped restore a section of Hess Creek and working on designing and building a bike shelter on campus.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
One life lesson I've learned is really good, deep conversations often occur around 4 am.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
I would be my roommate Chris Stanfield because he's a really awesome guy, plus I've always wondered what it would be like to be a foot taller.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
The Women’s Basketball team, Peer Advisors, S-AAC.
- What is one life lesson you’ve learned while here at Fox?
Surround yourself with good people. I have been so blessed by the community and support at Fox and am very thankful for my time here.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
Jessica Beliel because she’s the nicest.

Sarah Gilmore

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I actually never thought I would be a math major. But, towards the end of my senior year of high school, my calculus teacher encouraged me to think about it. So, I did - and decided to sign up for an elective math class during my first semester at Fox. I ended up loving it, and changed my major (from elementary education) before the spring semester started.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
The cool thing about the math department is that it’s really small. There are only 9 of us graduating this year, and we’ve spent a lot of time together – especially late at night in Lemmons, trying to finish our homework! Even though we’re all really different, we’ve become really close... and I like that. I’ve also had the opportunity to be a TA for a math class, and do summer research with one of my professors. Outside of the math department, I’ve been an RA for 3 years, and been a part of the track team. Those two experiences have helped me create some of my favorite memories from the past four years!
- What is one life lesson you’ve learned while here at Fox?
“It’s okay to ask for help.” I’m pretty independent and determined, and I like trying to do everything by myself. Being an RA and taking really hard classes has taught me that I can’t always rely on my own abilities. Asking friends, professors, and God for help is an okay thing to do!
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
I would be Joey Bareither because he’s really punny, and he rocks at art.

I chose to major in Graphic Design and Fashion because the mix of art and clothing was always so interesting to me I was beginning to notice and admire graphic tees when I was in middle school and early in high school but the two clicked when I was exposed to Shepard Faireys clothing line “Obey” and other Streetwear brands.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?

I believe I bring a lot of diversity. Not just in my ethnicity but also in my personality, design style and concepts.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I've learned to not to try to be better than anyone else because then whatever you create comes from an unhealthy negative place. But if you work hard and continue to challenge yourself it will show in your work and you could still have respect for yourself and other students.

- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?

I try not entertaining the thought of being anyone else but myself but there are several students that have certain characteristics that I really admire. Angelo Florez has a dedication to learn and takes him into different areas and sticks to it even when it's challenging. Elisa Hutsell & Kacee Woods have an incredible work ethic and it shows in the class room and in their work. But if I could be more like anyone else it would be my sister Janet Benitez who has always been a good student and is the most repressible person I know.

Matthew Swanson

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I chose Spanish because in high school I loved the language and worked on farms with many migrant workers and felt like I needed to be able to relate more with them.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
In the Spanish department, the professors frequently come to me for technology help and I have helped Spanish chapel worship bands with their setup and sound. In the GFU community, I run sound for events and chapel, stream Bruin sports games online, and have helped lead many small worship sessions during events.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
One life lesson I've learned while at Fox is how much I rely on and appreciate others, as well as God. I used to think I could handle everything and was very stressed, but recently I have been more open about my burdens and trials and I feel more connected to my friends and savior.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
If I could be any other GFU student, I would be Luis Magallanes because everybody knows and loves him, he speaks three languages, and cares more about others than himself. Also, the beard.

I love rollerblading and often use it as transportation to class (even in the snow). Also, while I was studying abroad in Costa Rica I was hit in the head with a machete and my mother still doesn't know what the scar on my forehead is from....

Jamie Neavill

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I was drawn to this study because I feel a connection to the language; I have ever since I started taking Spanish classes in middle school. I came in to Fox planning to enter a different field of study, but I was fascinated by Spanish/Latin American literature and culture, and thrilled by the opportunities to learn and serve in the Hispanic community here in Newberg. Through these learning/serving experiences, I've felt a call to serve this community that is so often marginalized here in the US.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I've been blessed to work in the Spanish Department in varying capacities during these last three years. I've both tutored and been tutored by fellow students studying Spanish.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
That we're not meant to walk alone. If we are to pursue God, or the way of Jesus, we need community. We need to walk together, to carry each other's burdens, to inspire one another, and to enjoy everything beautiful that is of God-together.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Debbie Berhó; because she has a brilliant mind, an open, compassionate heart; she is wonderfully fluent in Spanish, has diverse cultural understanding, and has traveled through much (if not all of) Latin America. She is full of life every day, she knows who she is, and in all this she manages a humility that allows her to be approachable.

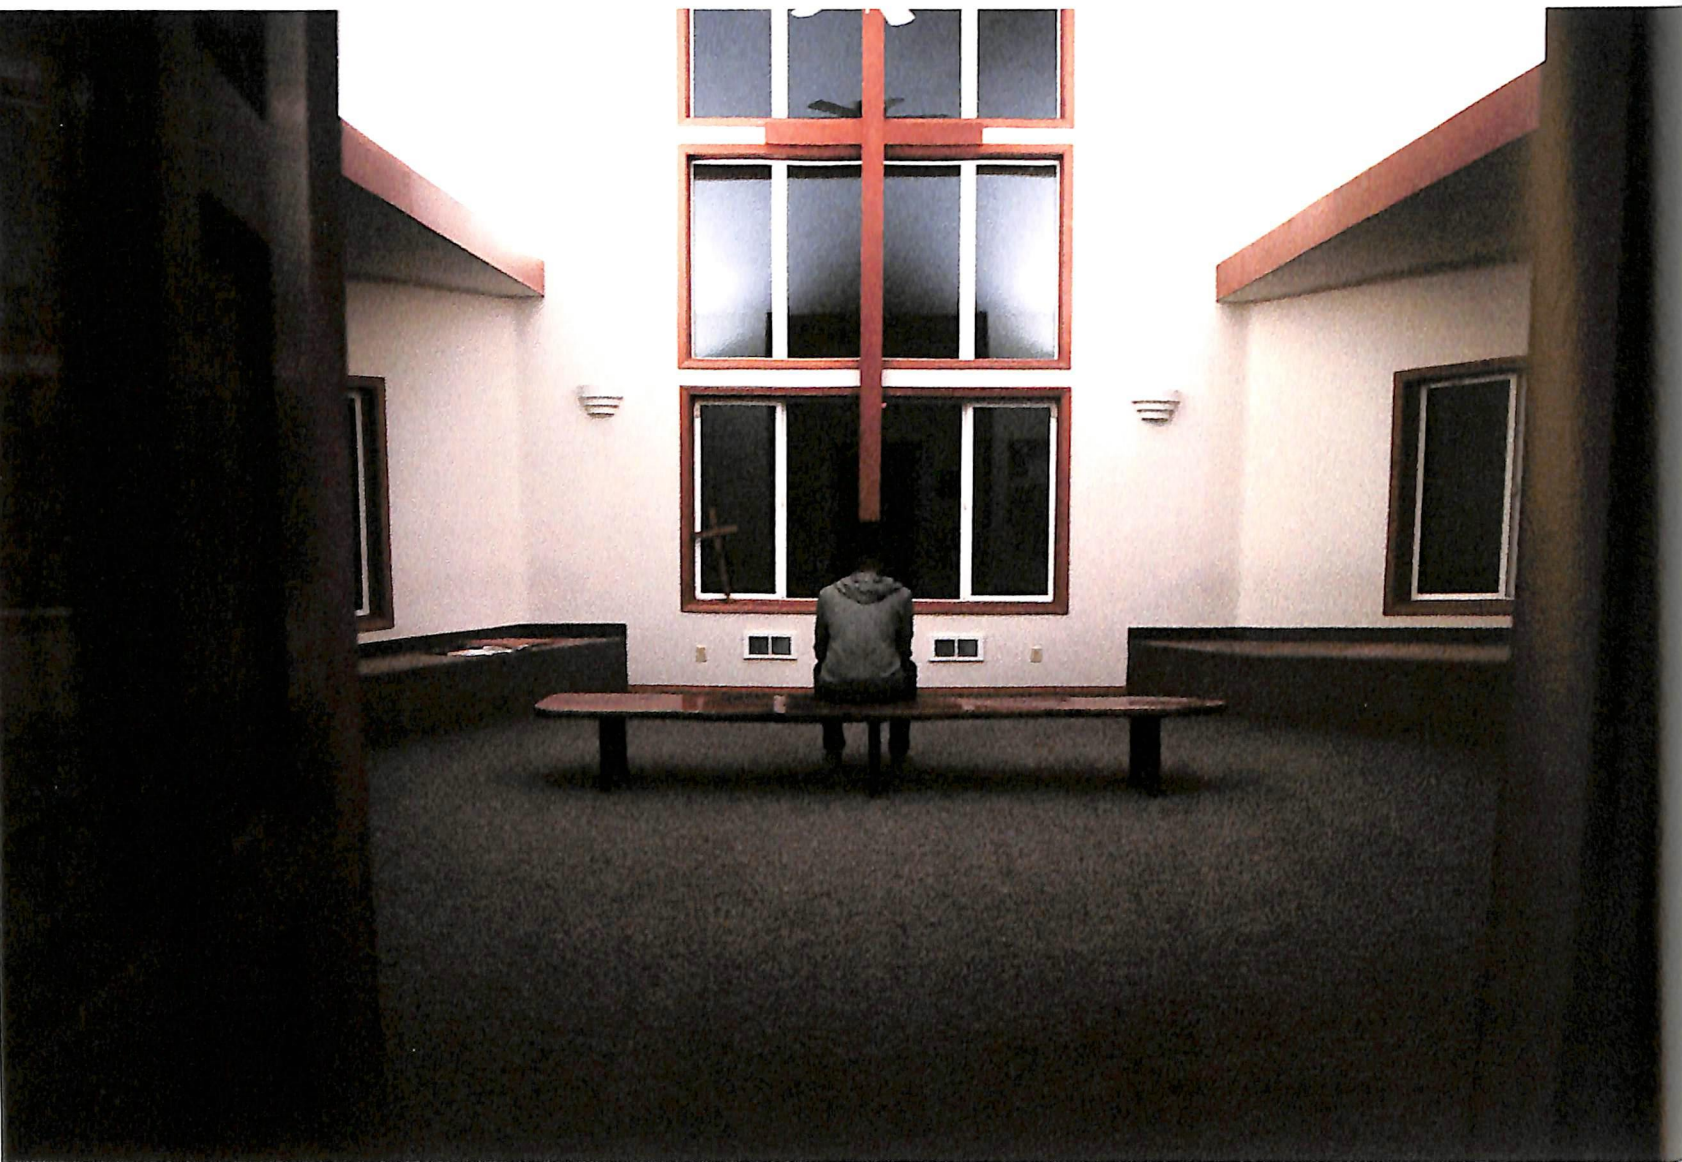

Tranquila, mae. ¡La vida es una sola!

WORDS BY JULIA HOWELL

ORIGINS

When the Chehalem Monthly Meeting of Friends gathered in 1884 to share about their new life in Oregon, they agreed there was much to be thankful for. They had their strong faith, a rich community, and beautiful place to live. But there was one thing missing: a place to teach their children.

The Friends purchased four acres of land in Newberg, recognizing it was perfect for a secondary school. The Friends constructed two buildings and opened the doors to Pacific Academy in 1885 with an initial class of nineteen students.

The school was more successful than they could have hoped, attracting more and more students every year. Soon, many of the students began looking for options for higher learning. The Chehalem Friends met again in 1890 to consider what could be done. They realized the solution was right in front of them: to add a college to the academy.

Pacific College was founded in June 1891. The first enrolled class consisted of only fifteen students with two choices of majors: Classical Studies (Bachelor of Arts) and Scientific Studies (Bachelor of Science). Tuition was $8 per term. The Friends knew from the beginning the mission they hoped the new school would accomplish. They wrote this mission in the first school catalog: "The object of this college shall be to give a thorough training in the Arts, and Sciences, and to teach those subjects ordinarily coming in a course of college training. It shall strive in every possible manner to spread Christian Culture."

Soon, the young school was attracting so many students that the administration decided to relocate. In 1893, a plot of land was purchased on the corner of Meridian and Sheridan and the two buildings (now Hoover and Minthorn) were moved to the new location.

Quaker values were ingrained in every part of the Pacific College education. Students were required to attend weekly prayer meetings and Sunday devotions. No complaining happened about these chapel services as students loved to attend and in 1896, undergraduates themselves gave over 100 sermons.

Students and faculty were also held to a strict conduct code. They were required to abstain from profanity, intoxicants, tobacco, card playing, and dancing. Fortunately, there were a variety of co-curricular activities and clubs including football, basketball, track, soccer, baseball, drama club, glee club, and Christian Associations.

In its first years the school experienced financial struggles, but the staff and administration never lost sight of their goal in founding the school. The administration were confident of their purpose as written in the first school catalogue:

"Our efforts for Pacific College are for the Master; this work is His."

CONTINUING TRADITION

This particular mindset has been the core of the school since its start remains the same today at George Fox University. The faculty and students have experienced bumps along the way, but have never lost sight of their aim: to not only be educated intellectually, but to be enriched spiritually as they seek to follow Christ in every part of their lives. Jamie Johnson, the associate campus pastor of Christian leadership, discipleship, and Friends leadership, recognizes the need to educate current students about the school's Quaker roots. "You might know that the term Quaker or Friends is somehow connected with this place, but what does that mean?" says Johnson. "Knowing the what helps our community better understand the how of what we do here, and what we hope our graduates will do upon leaving this place."

Upon learning of George Fox's Quaker heritage, many are uncertain of what it refers to. Some, seeking to find a point of reference, think of the well-known oatmeal brand. Fortunately, there is a lot more to the Quaker tradition than a hearty breakfast. The entire foundation of George Fox is based on a tradition of hearty faith and a belief that spiritual enrichment goes hand-in-hand with intellectual growth. So how does the university maintain Quaker tradition on a campus of students who may have little or no idea what it means?

George Fox is unique among Christian universities in its offering of a Quaker Studies minor. Students can take classes like the History and Doctrine of Friends or Biblical Basis for Peacemaking. The Spiritual Life office also hosts Quaker Heritage Week each year, when students gather at chapel services to learn what it means to be rooted in Friends tradition. Chapel services, which are mandatory for students, also reflect the faith origins of the school. "There is less production in our worship services than what you might find in a typical evangelical church because Quakers value simplicity," says Johnson.

Another value that is evident on campus is the practice of waiting on God in silence. The Prayer Chapel, located between Edwards residence hall and Weesner Village, provides a place for students to pray or reflect in silence. Even the relationships between students and faculty show this commitment to faith-oriented education. Professors go on a first-name basis with their students, which is unusual for a post-secondary institution.

"That demonstrates equality," says Johnson, "which Quakers have always emphasized."

Drew Miller, a senior English major, has experienced the Quaker heritage first-hand as a student. He was raised in the Friends church and is now a part of the community at George Fox.

▪ What does being a Quaker mean to you?

Central to Quaker belief is the biblical idea of the Imago Dei, the reality that all people are made in the image of God, and that God's presence dwells in all people. I highly identify with this thought, which has radical implications for how we live; if everyone is made in the image of God, then I have to love everyone, or I am dishonoring God. Furthermore, Quakers believe that each person and community has direct access to God, whether or not they have access to the Bible or have a Ph.D. in Bible.

▪ What brought you to George Fox, a Quaker University?

I had connections to the university through family and my Quaker community.

▪ Did you grow up going to a Friends church?

Yes, I've been in the Friends Church all of my life. I have found it to be a very loving community, certainly with flaws, but with an emphasis on following God rather than following the rules.

▪ Do you attend a Friends church in Newberg?

Yes—Newberg Friends.

▪ How have you seen the Quaker tradition maintained at George Fox, in the students, faculty and campus events?

Because of the diversity of Quakers, different Quakers would have very different responses to this question. Some would say that George Fox is hardly Quaker at all—Quaker higher education seems a bit ironic, as higher education tends to be hierarchical and Quakers don't believe in hierarchy. Quaker students are a minority in the student body as well as in the faculty and administration. At the same time, there are Quaker connections—we have access to a Quaker studies minor, and there are pockets of the university that, like historical Quakers, deeply value equality, justice, and a keen awareness for the working of the Holy Spirit.

This year's campus wide Serve Day included 1800 students, 200 faculty, and other members of the community. A 6 hour work day with 89 different sites and over 1,200 cumulative hours of community service were completed. In cooperation with Love INC, the whole George Fox community worked towards blessing the surrounding Newberg area with yard work, house repair, cleaning, art projects, and general acts of kindness.

WORDS BY LEAH ABRAHAM

In fall 2013, Lizzy Riese returned to campus with a lot of excitement. She had been waiting all summer to come back and finally start her new job as a Resident Assistant (RA). As a first time RA, Lizzy was thrilled and a little nervous to meet her residents.

However, there was one daunting mountain that stood in the way of her meeting her residents – Walkabout. Walkabout is an “adventure based experience designed to inspire participants to exceed self expectations, to value and care for the wilderness, and to learn the principles and practice the disciplines of leadership within the context of a challenging and supportive community.” In other words, Walkabout is a weeklong backpacking trip for RAs scheduled right before move-in. The trip is intended to teach valuable leadership and spiritual lessons.

RAs are divided into teams and sent off to the luscious wilderness of Sisters, Oregon. They are equipped with basic clothing, food, a professional wilderness guide, the support of each other, and a few tricks Residence Life throws at the RAs along the way.

While this trip excites the outdoorsy, nature-loving folk, it can be daunting for those like Lizzy who prefers the comforts of civilization. “I was really hesitant to go on this trip because I had never been backpacking before nor have I ever done anything like this before,” Lizzy confesses. “I was really scared to deal with bodily functions (a.k.a. pooping and peeing) in the great outdoors and I was worried that I was going to be the slowest and least prepared person in the group.” Pooping in the woods wasn’t the only mountain Lizzy had to face. In fact, she had to literally climb a mountain.

That’s right – the Walkabout isn’t complete without experience of summiting a mountain. This journey to summit is significant in many ways – it requires a lot of physical strength, mental exertion, and absolute trust in your group.

When summit day had rolled around for Lizzy’s group, Lizzy was exhausted, body and soul. Nothing about climbing a mountain appealed to her. The summiting journey was so physically demanding that Lizzy was close to calling it quits. “I had an emotional breakdown close to the summit,” Lizzy says. “I was mentally, physically, and emotionally done. I was about to ask our guide if I could sit down so that they could summit, then meet up with me later.”

However, in Walkabout, no one gets left behind; it is a journey that a group takes together.

“To my surprise, Nikki, our guide, and James, my AAC, put their hands on me and assured me that I was capable of making it to the top. Then the group surrounded me and prayed over me. And from that moment on, I felt reenergized, and even joyful! I knew I could make it! And we made it to the top! I summited with more energy than I knew was possible!” Lizzy remarks.

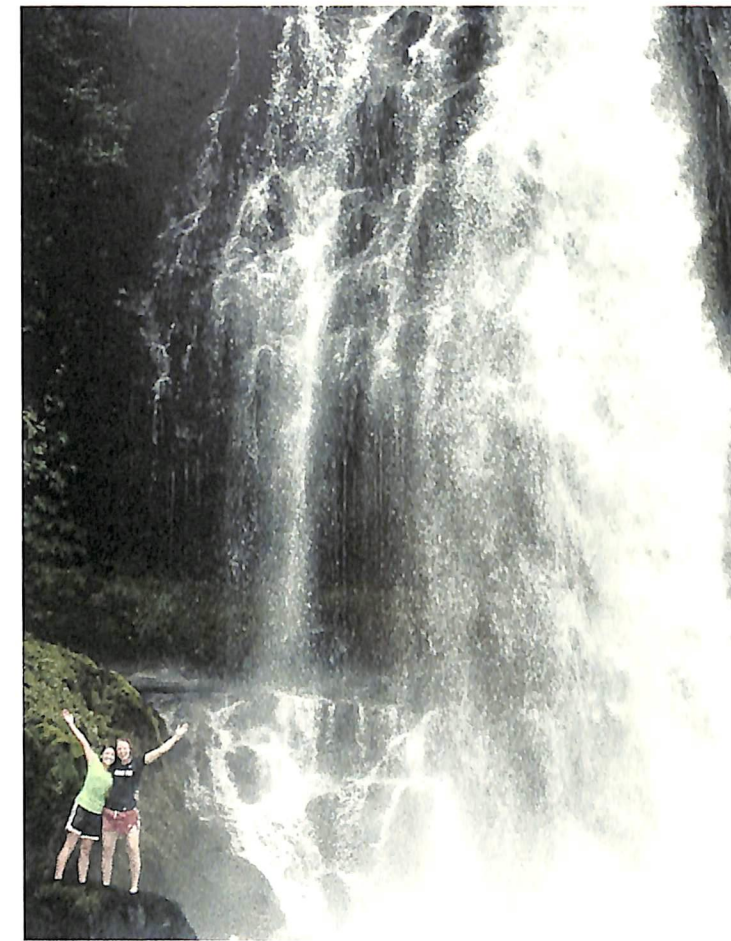

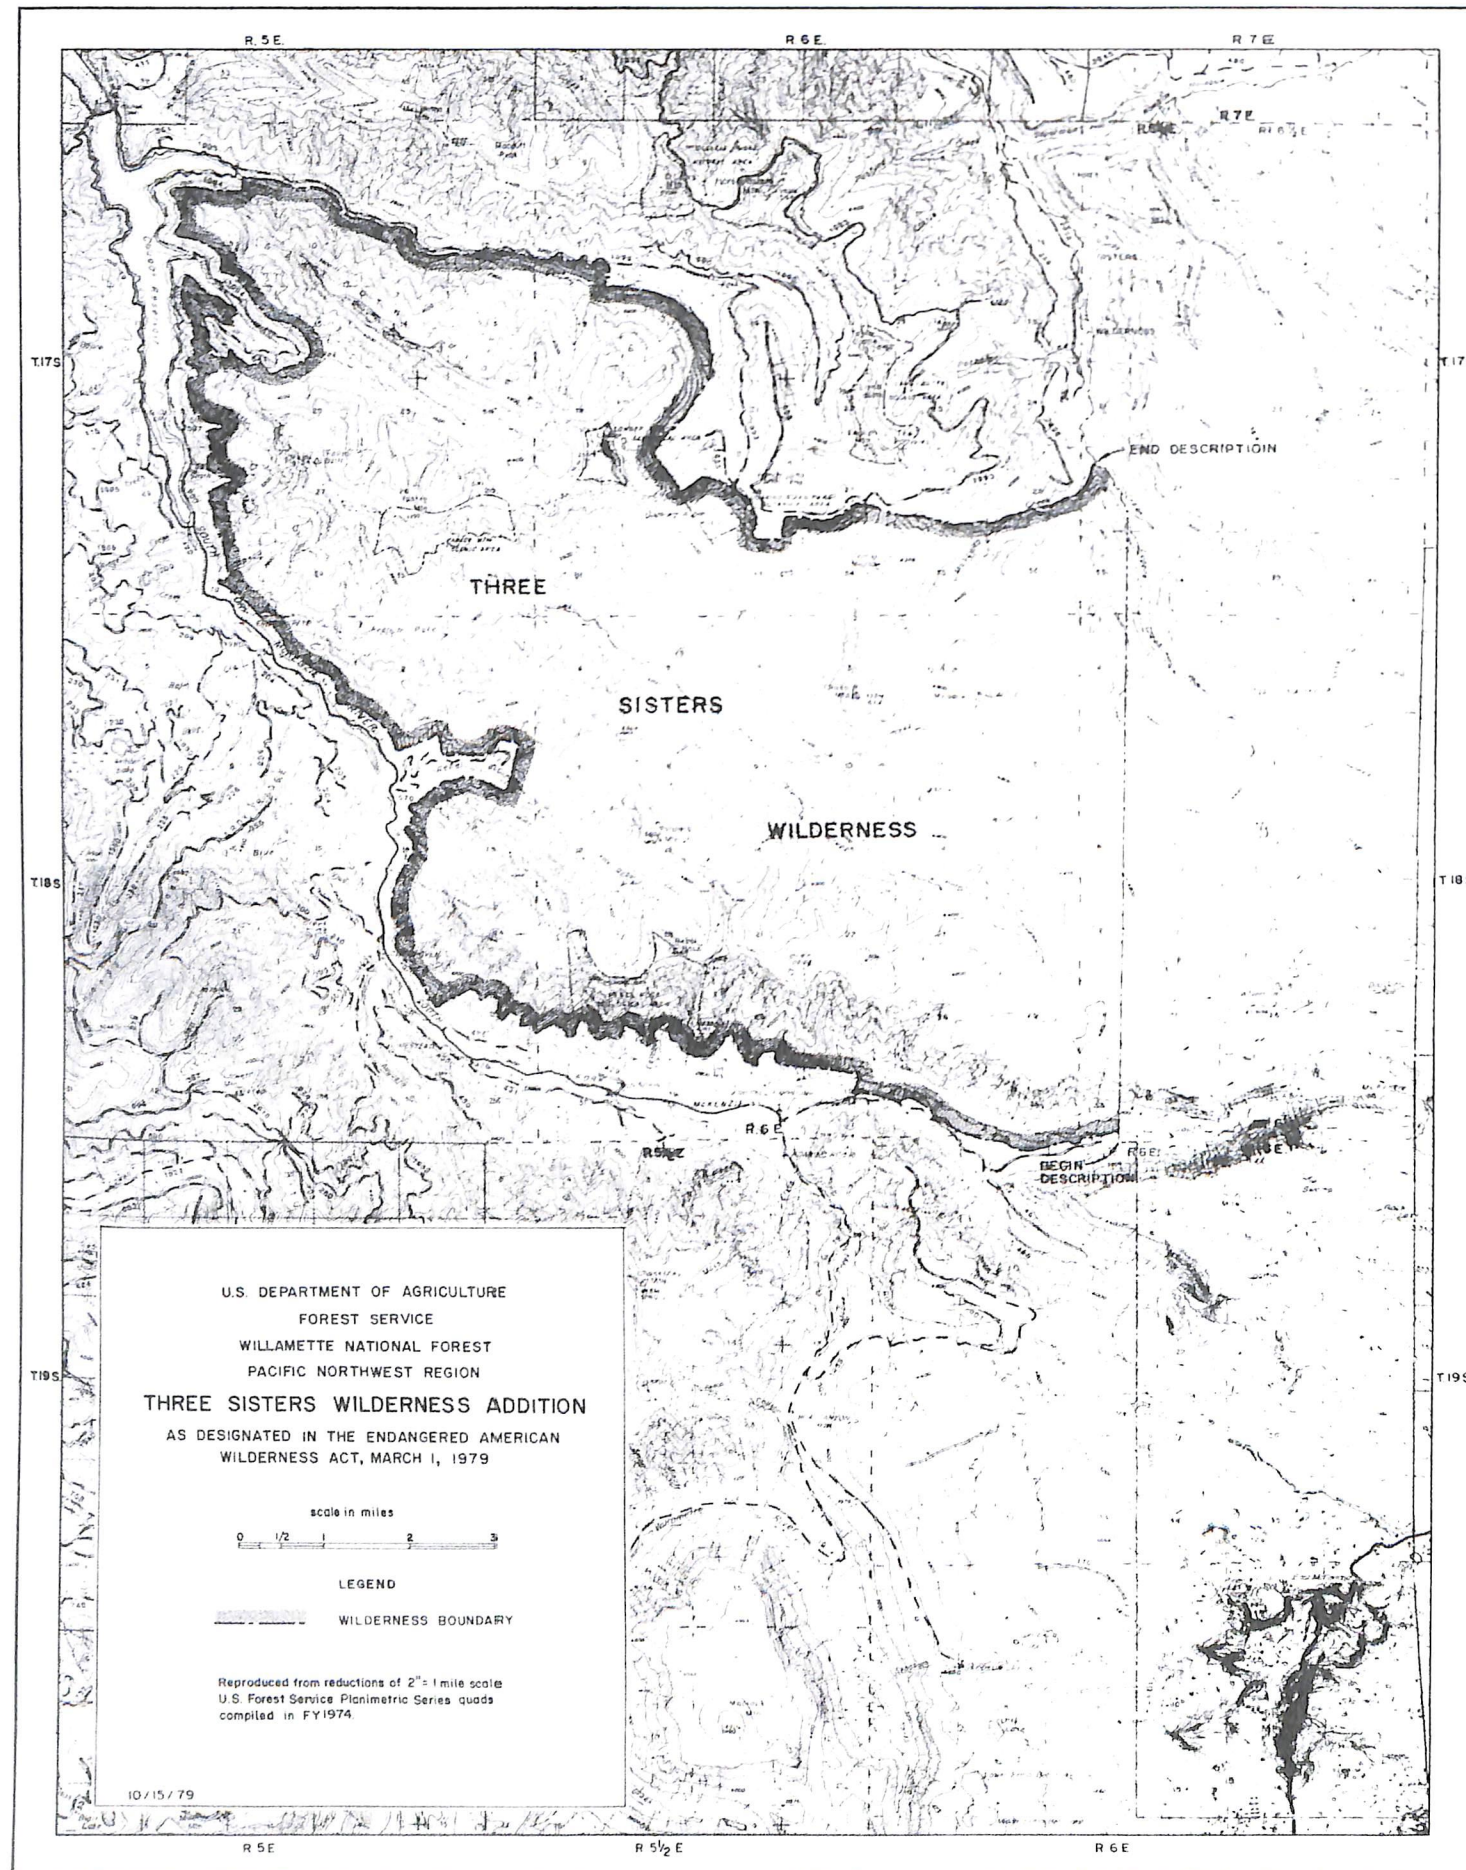

As Lizzy stood on top of the mountain she had conquered, she realized that the true summit experience had little to do with getting to the top. The true summit experience was all about allowing herself to be vulnerable in front of her group, trusting in the encouragement that she was showered with, and pushing through the pain together to finally complete her task. “Thanks to this experience I realized that God was faithful to his promise,” Lizzy says. “He truly is in control of everything, and I was able to trust Him. And that helped me make it to the top!”

Walkabout is structured to not only teach students about the importance of community, but also the importance of solitude. During the trip, RAs spend 24 hours by themselves, practicing spiritual disciplines such as fasting, silence, and prayer.

While some may find being isolated in wilderness a challenge, others might find difficulty being in solitude for an entire day. But for all, it is the lessons about community, trust, vulnerability, and hope that resonate throughout Walkabout.

Though Walkabout is designed to enhance the RA experience, it also imparts lessons that carry beyond the role of an RA.

“Walkabout was the coolest experience I have had in my life,” says Lizzy. “It was transformational . . . I was able to see the way God works in our lives. He takes really difficult circumstances, like the (literal and metaphorical) mountains that we face . . . then provides us with the right tools and people, and then guides us to the top. That has been so helpful to remember when I go through the stress of not only being an RA, but also a student and human being. God will never forsake me. Thanks to Walkabout, I know that in the mess of life, He places His hand on me and reminds me that I can do it in His grace.”

George Fox University is in the midst of an athletic revival. With the advent of the new football program, headed up by Coach Casey, we've been given the opportunity to excel once again in sportsmanship and Christ-centered team development. Many of the current players, as they practice for the 2014 fall season, would say that football is a means of bringing students together. With the extra curricular events that Friday night games will create, as well as the common bond found in team camaraderie, many students, faculty, and alumni are anxiously anticipating the breaking in of the new turf. Although this is an exciting turn of events for George Fox, there is also a slight push back from members of the community and within the university as well. As the stigma dictates, sports such as these can also usher in a different culture, erring less on the side of academics and more on the side that is typically detrimental to academia as a whole. Thus, Coach Casey, as well as the defensive and offensive coordinators Coach Bates and Coach Ingram, have been working hard to instill an atmosphere of leadership and integrity within the players. An example of this was seen during Welcome Weekend as the entire football team worked tirelessly to help freshman move into their on campus housing. Another was seen at the Empty Bowls event as a smaller group of players volunteered their time to set up and take down. Although we'd love to see the team on its way to nationals, it's safe to say that winning isn't the only goal for the George Fox football program.

Sports have a sneaky way of bringing about community (in the midst of a competitive atmosphere nonetheless) and a large portion of this can be attributed to the diligence of the coaches as they structure and develop a team dynamic. However, it is primarily dependent on the hearts and dispositions of the players. Thus, let's continue to foster a mentality of camaraderie as a student body, not just within the team itself, but in our perception of the football program as a whole. Imagine how much stronger we could be if we all do this together.

It's been about 70 years since George Fox has seen these kind of uniforms (above photo from 1935 edition of L'ami, bottom photo from this year's football team), and about 45 years since football was an official team sport at the university.

VOLLEYBALL-[vol-ee-bawl]

noun. a game for two teams in which the object is to keep a large ball in motion, from side to side over a high net, by striking it with the hands before it touches the ground.

VELOUR

Fashion Recycled

716 E. 1st Street
Newberg, OR 97132

Why not do something that you like and love? That was the thought of George Fox alumni, brothers Stephen and Andy and their wives Amy and Jessica, the creative team behind the clothing store Velour. Coming together to create a locally owned clothing shop was second nature to the two couples. All four of them loved doing creative things and felt no desire to get a real or typical job, as Jessica describes. They enjoyed thrifting and collecting treasures and had always joked about opening up a shop together, though nothing ever came from it. But in 2011, a small building became available for rent at a really great deal and they jumped at the opportunity. “We kind of decided in two days to do it so there wasn’t much prep,” says Jessica. While it was a whirlwind to open early April 2011, they enjoyed every moment of it.

In November 2013 they moved to their current storefront on First Street and saw their vision of a vintage clothing store come to fruition. The idea is that instead of going to thrift stores, antique stores, and estate sales and sifting through isles and piles, the team at Velour does it for you. They also have an excellent buy, sell, and trade program that allows customers to bring in clothes in exchange for cash or in-store credit. “A lot of times in college you don’t have a lot of money to shop, so it’s great to be able to come in and get something new and just exchange instead of having to go spend a lot of money,” says Jessica. The entrepreneurial spirit of old-town Newberg is strengthened by Velour and the curated retail experience it provides.

RAY'S

Produce and Market

205 N. Main Street
Newberg, OR 97132

Ray's Produce is one of the best stops along highway 99. With fresh fruits and vegetables at fantastic prices, locals and tourists love to stop in and pick up food for their tables.

The owner, Raymundo, began selling fruits and vegetables from his truck and like every successful business, it kept getting bigger and bigger until it became the open-aired produce store it is today.

(Interview with Kevin, the owner's nephew)

Current owner:

"That's pretty much my uncle Raymundo."

Background story:

From what I know, he started selling fruits and vegetables on a truck, so that's pretty much how he started. And then it just started to get bigger and bigger and became all this.

Interactions with GFU:

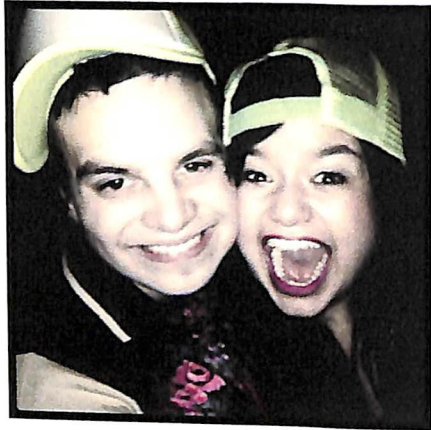

Well we had a worker from there once here and then last summer we did this thing where we gave out fruits to them, so that was pretty insane.

Mission statement:

Fresh, quality produce.

For those who grew up on WOW Hits 2005, Jump Five, Newsboys, and Carrie Grant - I trust that you had a similar experience to the following story:

It was 2003, and Switchfoot had just released their first complete album. I remember sitting in the backseat of my dad's car (completely oblivious to the world of music), listening to Beautiful Letdown on the radio and thinking, "I never knew christian music could sound this cool".

Given, they're probably not everyone's most listened to band currently, they're not even technically a 'christian' band. However, I trust that for those of you with a similar experience, Switchfoot most likely holds a special place in your heart.

From Beautiful Letdown to Jon Foreman's single EP's, they're still considered a thriving band, touring from the US to places like Australia. So, when ASC organized to have them come perform at Fox on November 16th, many couldn't help but get their ticket several months in advance.

The evening of, Bauman auditorium was packed, but sitting quietly. This, of course, was due to the premier of their new documentary Fading West, which features the band and their interactions with performing as musicians and with being avid surfers.

In total, it was a wonderful evening. Switchfoot has a heart for their audience, evident not only in the way they interact conversationally throughout the concert, but by the heart and soul they put into the actual performance.

The House of Bernarda Alba (Spanish: La casa de Bernarda Alba) is a play by the Spanish dramatist Federico García Lorca. Commentators have often grouped it with Blood Wedding and Yerma as a “rural trilogy”. Lorca did not include it in his plan for a “trilogy of the Spanish earth” (which remained unfinished at the time of his murder). Lorca described the play in its subtitle as a drama of women in the villages of Spain. The House of Bernarda Alba was Lorca’s last play, completed on 19 June 1936, two months before Lorca’s death during the Spanish Civil War. The play was first performed in 1945. The play centers around the events of a house in Andalusia during a period of mourning, in which Bernarda Alba (aged 60) wields total control over her five daughters Angustias (39), Magdalena (30), Amelia (27), Martirio, (24), and Adela (20). The housekeeper (La Poncia) and Bernarda’s elderly mother (María Josefa) also live there.

The deliberate exclusion of any male character from the action helps build up the high level of sexual tension that is present throughout the play. Pepe “el Romano”, the love interest of Bernarda’s daughters and suitor of Angustias, never appears on stage. The play explores themes of repression, passion, and conformity, and inspects the effects of men upon women.

CLUBS I

"In friendship...we think we have chosen our peers. In reality a few years' difference in the dates of our births, a few more miles between certain houses, the choice of one university instead of another...the accident of a topic being raised or not raised at a first meeting--any of these chances might have kept us apart... the friendship is not a reward for our discriminating and good taste in finding one another out. It is the instrument by which God reveals to each of us the beauties of others."

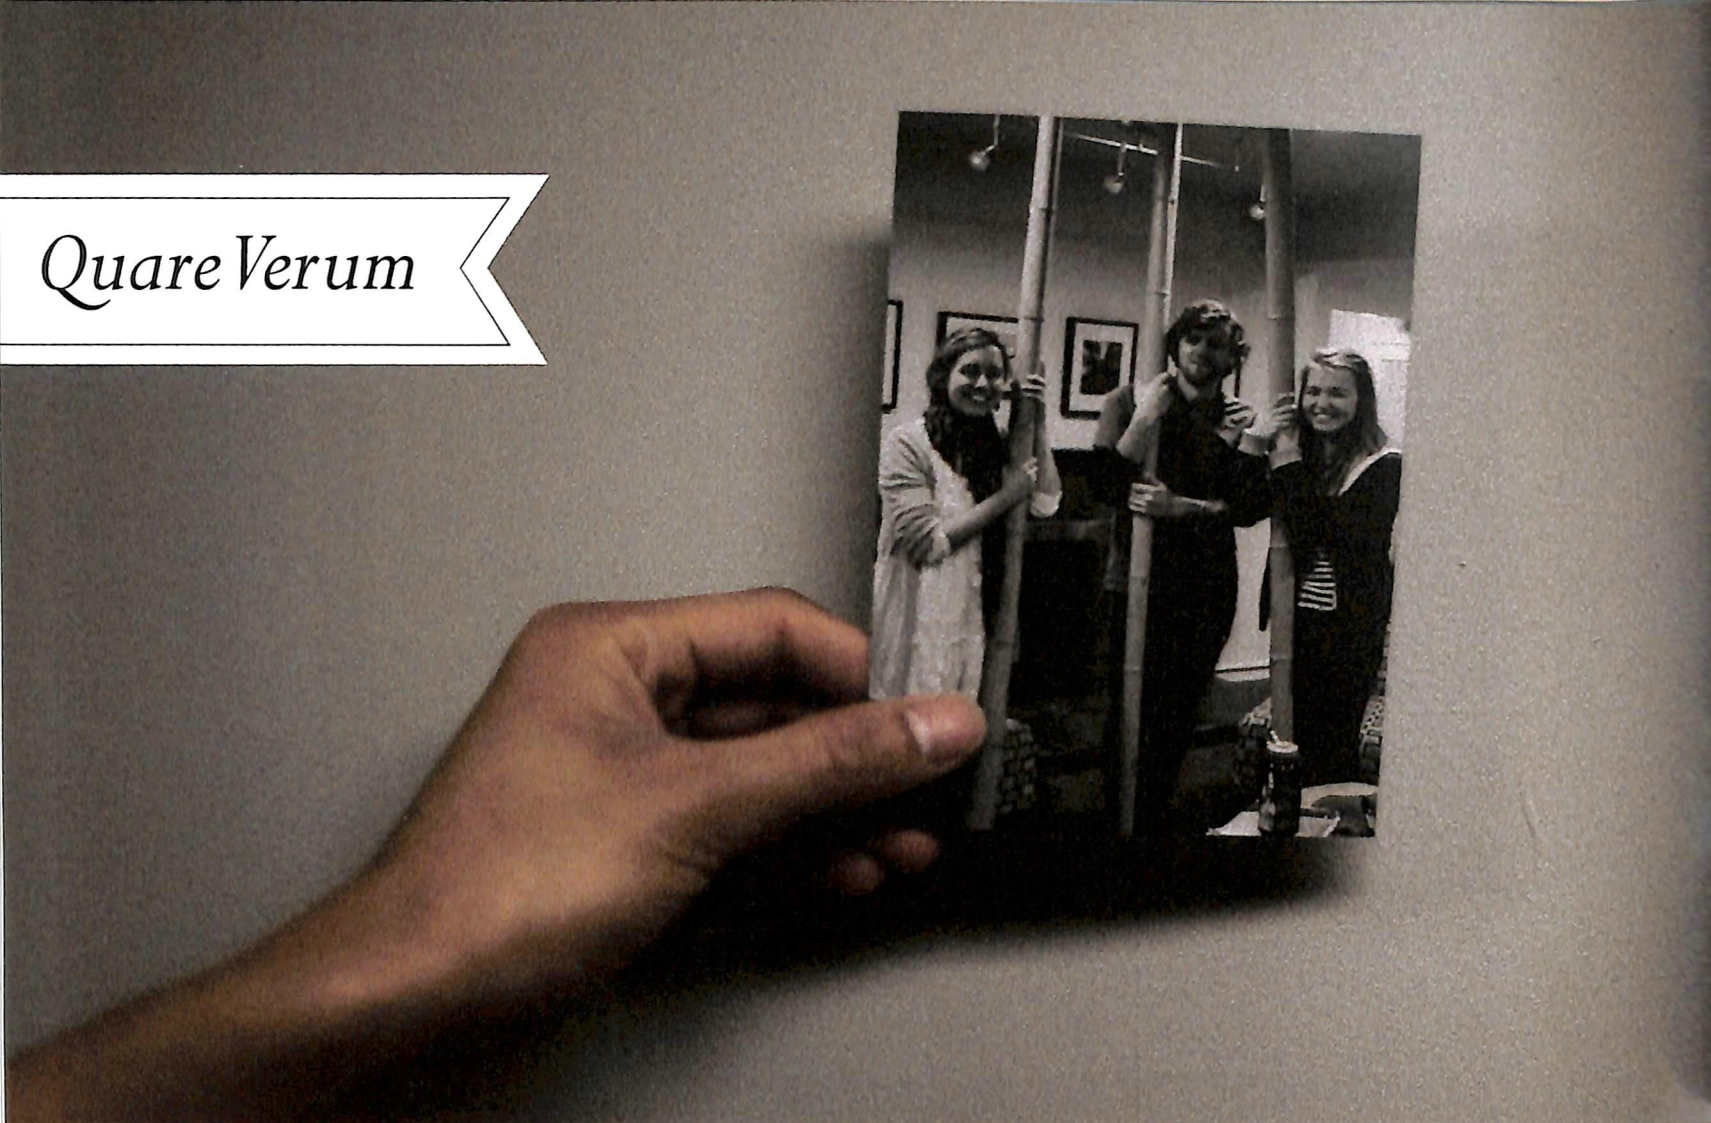

~ C.S. Lewis,
The Four Loves

SHALOM

thursday ♦ 9 pm ♦ cap & gown

Shalom is an evening gathering of students who strive to grow spiritually through discussion and worship. The name Shalom is a Hebrew word meaning peace, completeness, prosperity, and can be used idiomatically to mean both "hello" and "goodbye." Shalom was started about six years ago to provide a space where students could experience God in a more intimate environment. It has grown to encompass students from all walks of life, faith, and diversity and through it all, God has shown Himself.

One fundamental aspect of Shalom is that it has given the opportunity for students to lead others in spiritual growth. There is something beautiful when one student meets another, wherever they might be, gently guiding them through the trials and blessings that college life brings. It is in this voluntary gathering of students who set aside time from their busy schedules to enter into worship that some have found the place where they fully feel God's presence.

Quare Verum

Our club is about coming together to share soup and discuss issues and topics that are relevant to us. Sometimes we have guests come and introduce discussions, but largely the topics spring forth from the group itself. One way that we try to impact the Fox community, besides promoting a space where people can feel that they belong, is to open up the opportunity for students to share their own projects and thoughts. For example, Megan Clark came and showed us her documentary on sex offenders that was funded by a Richter Scholarship and Drew Miller, who has been involved the First Nations community and mentored by Randy Woodley, shared his thoughts about America's relationship with those groups and how it interacts with theology. Our time in QV, both leading it and participating in it, has been life-changing. It is hard to measure the value of a deep appreciation for the thoughts and contributions of all people. The friends we have made in this club, the insight and vulnerability, and the opportunities have changed us. I think that sometimes the club's name, Quaere Verum, can come off as being super pretentious and uninviting to those who don't think they are really smart, however, we are down to earth and anybody's perspective is valued and respected.

KFOX Radio

KFOX allows students to publicly express themselves in a variety of ways including music playlists, talking points, themed shows, and comedy shows. It provides an introduction to working with basic sound equipment and counts as legitimate radio experience. Through podcasting, all student work is recorded and made available anywhere. KFOX is a public way for students to inform their peers of their interests.

KFOX strives to be a part of general student entertainment. The group provides a unique bonding experience and serves as an outlet for self-expression. Students gain valuable work experience through the club. KFOX airs good shows hosted by fun people, covering a wide range of interests. If you love making playlists, sharing your opinions, or even just talking with people, KFOX has room for you.

Mu Kappa Club

How did Mu Kappa get started?
 Jamie: We [Jamie and Carrie] met in freshman seminar and we had looked at other colleges that had Mu Kappa and we both came here wondering 'Why don't we have one?'
 Carrie: Hoping that there would be one because a lot of private Christian colleges have clubs for missionary kids, but George Fox didn't have anything like that and we were pretty surprised since George Fox is so prominent. We had a desire to have a club where missionary kids and where third world kids can have a place to express their culture and to express their cultural stance on stuff. Because often people that grew up in another country don't really express that integral aspect of their culture very much. So we just really wanted there to be somewhere where we could connect on that level as well as educate anybody who is curious.

What countries did you guys grow up in?

Carrie: I grew up in Kenya.

Jamie: Indonesia.

Bree: Rwowanda and Kenya

Jamie: It's actually surprising how many there are. There are people from a lot of different places at Fox that you wouldn't have known.

Carrie: And you wouldn't have known because they look like everybody else.

We got approved as a club in November, and then this semester has been a lot of learning how to plan meetings and events.

ASC

What is ASC? It's the Associated Student Community of George Fox. But, honestly, what the heck does that even mean? On surface level you might know ASC as a student operated government or maybe an event planning committee. In reality, ASC is much more than that. ASC is about being apart of something which is meaningful and impacting. It's an opportunity to influence the direction of our university and contribute to the student experience at George Fox. Members of ASC are privileged to represent the student body. These individuals who make up ASC have different majors, backgrounds, passions, and interests. They are students of all ages who come together under one common goal:

to represent the students. Each individual in ASC communicates with different leaders, staff, administrators, and offices, voicing student concerns and ideas. They work together to develop plans and turn ideas into reality. It takes not only the 90 committed individuals of ASC, but the entire student body to refine George Fox. ASC is not a group of individuals trying to fulfill their own goals, instead, they want to listen to the students ideas, big or small, to make this great university they call home an even better place. So, student body, join us and know that ASC is a resource. A resource to help give you the best student experience possible during your four short years at George Fox.

Fashion Club

New to George Fox University this year, the Fashion Club celebrates fashion as an art form and a way of life. Their goal is to be a medium used to unite a community of George Fox University Students through the expression of fashion, and a love for Christ with Proverbs 31:25 as their foundation. The club promotes an understanding of fashion as a method of cultural change, tribal belonging, and a form of abstract art.

They host fashion shows, fundraisers, and have a blog called Crosses and Cashmere. Members participate in events and fashion shows such as FashionNXT, Fade to Light, and Fashion Forward. They also team with local businesses to learn about and promote small apparel businesses. They are a laid back, open, creative, and tight knit group and would love for anyone to join.

Spoken Word

The Spoken Word provides a place for the Latino population to share the Latino culture with others and each other. The club focuses on inclusion and identity in Christ. It helps students on and off campus become more integrated and build deeper relationships. The Spoken Word practices combine leadership, culture, and academics. It provides a safe place to reflect on cultural differences and be vulnerable with one another without judgment. The club isn't exclusively for Latinos; it's for anyone interested in bridging cultural gaps.

FACULTY I

Our greatest teachers have seen the good within us and have helped make us wonderful. They have mastered the art of igniting creative expression, and they have shown us what it means to taste and seek knowledge. For each faculty member at George Fox University, we are endlessly thankful.

The following faculty members were nominated by inspired students, who were eager to recognize their impact.

TIM TIMMERMAN

Professor of Art

How long have you been working at Fox?

Eleven years.

What is it that first drew you here?

I went to graduate school in the Northwest and missed it, and I found Fox, a wonderful community I wanted to be a part of.

Funniest / most memorable student interaction?

It has been such an honor to walk with many students who are going through difficult times, or going through major life changes, that's very memorable for me.

For funny / memorable stories I think of juniors abroad where I've had a student almost knock over a sculpture in the Hermitage in Russia while trying to take a picture, Clint Baldwin getting three students into an exclusive fencing club in Belgium, to one jumping down on live tracks in a Munich subway station to retrieve a book they dropped.

And I'd love to hear if you have any particular advice to students?

Advice? Lean into Jesus and be honest and love for the long haul. It will be a lot of work, but it's worth it.

He has such a passion for what he teaches. He lives and breathes it which inspires me to learn!

LEAH PAYNE

Adjunct Faculty

I've been teaching at George Fox for a couple of years now and it's really gratifying to teach at my alma mater. My students are always impressing me with their creativity and humor - especially when they give presentations. One of my favorites was a presentation on real-life wannabe superheroes. The presenting students came in costume - it was great! A piece of advice that I always give my students is to not get too cynical. We live in a pessimistic society and one way that we bless the world is through our hope in Christ and his kingdom!

Leah is an outstanding professor of philosophy with a vibrance and energy that made the 7:40 Intro Ethics class not seem quite as early in the morning as it actually was. Her attention to detail, organization, and quality made the class the most enjoyable experience I have had while in college. She went above and beyond and encouraged her students to do the same. She was a professor that made you feel known! An amazing person that accurately represented what George Fox University stands for.

I'd consider mice to be pretty versatile little critters. They can be pets, they easily survive (and multiply) in the wild and they swim, crawl, jump, and fly.

Wait... What?!?

Yes, you heard correctly, flying mice. Amongst a slew of other stunts, a group of sneaky George Fox students in 1984 pulled some pretty elaborate pranks, one of which involved air-born mice.

The setting: Bauman Auditorium.

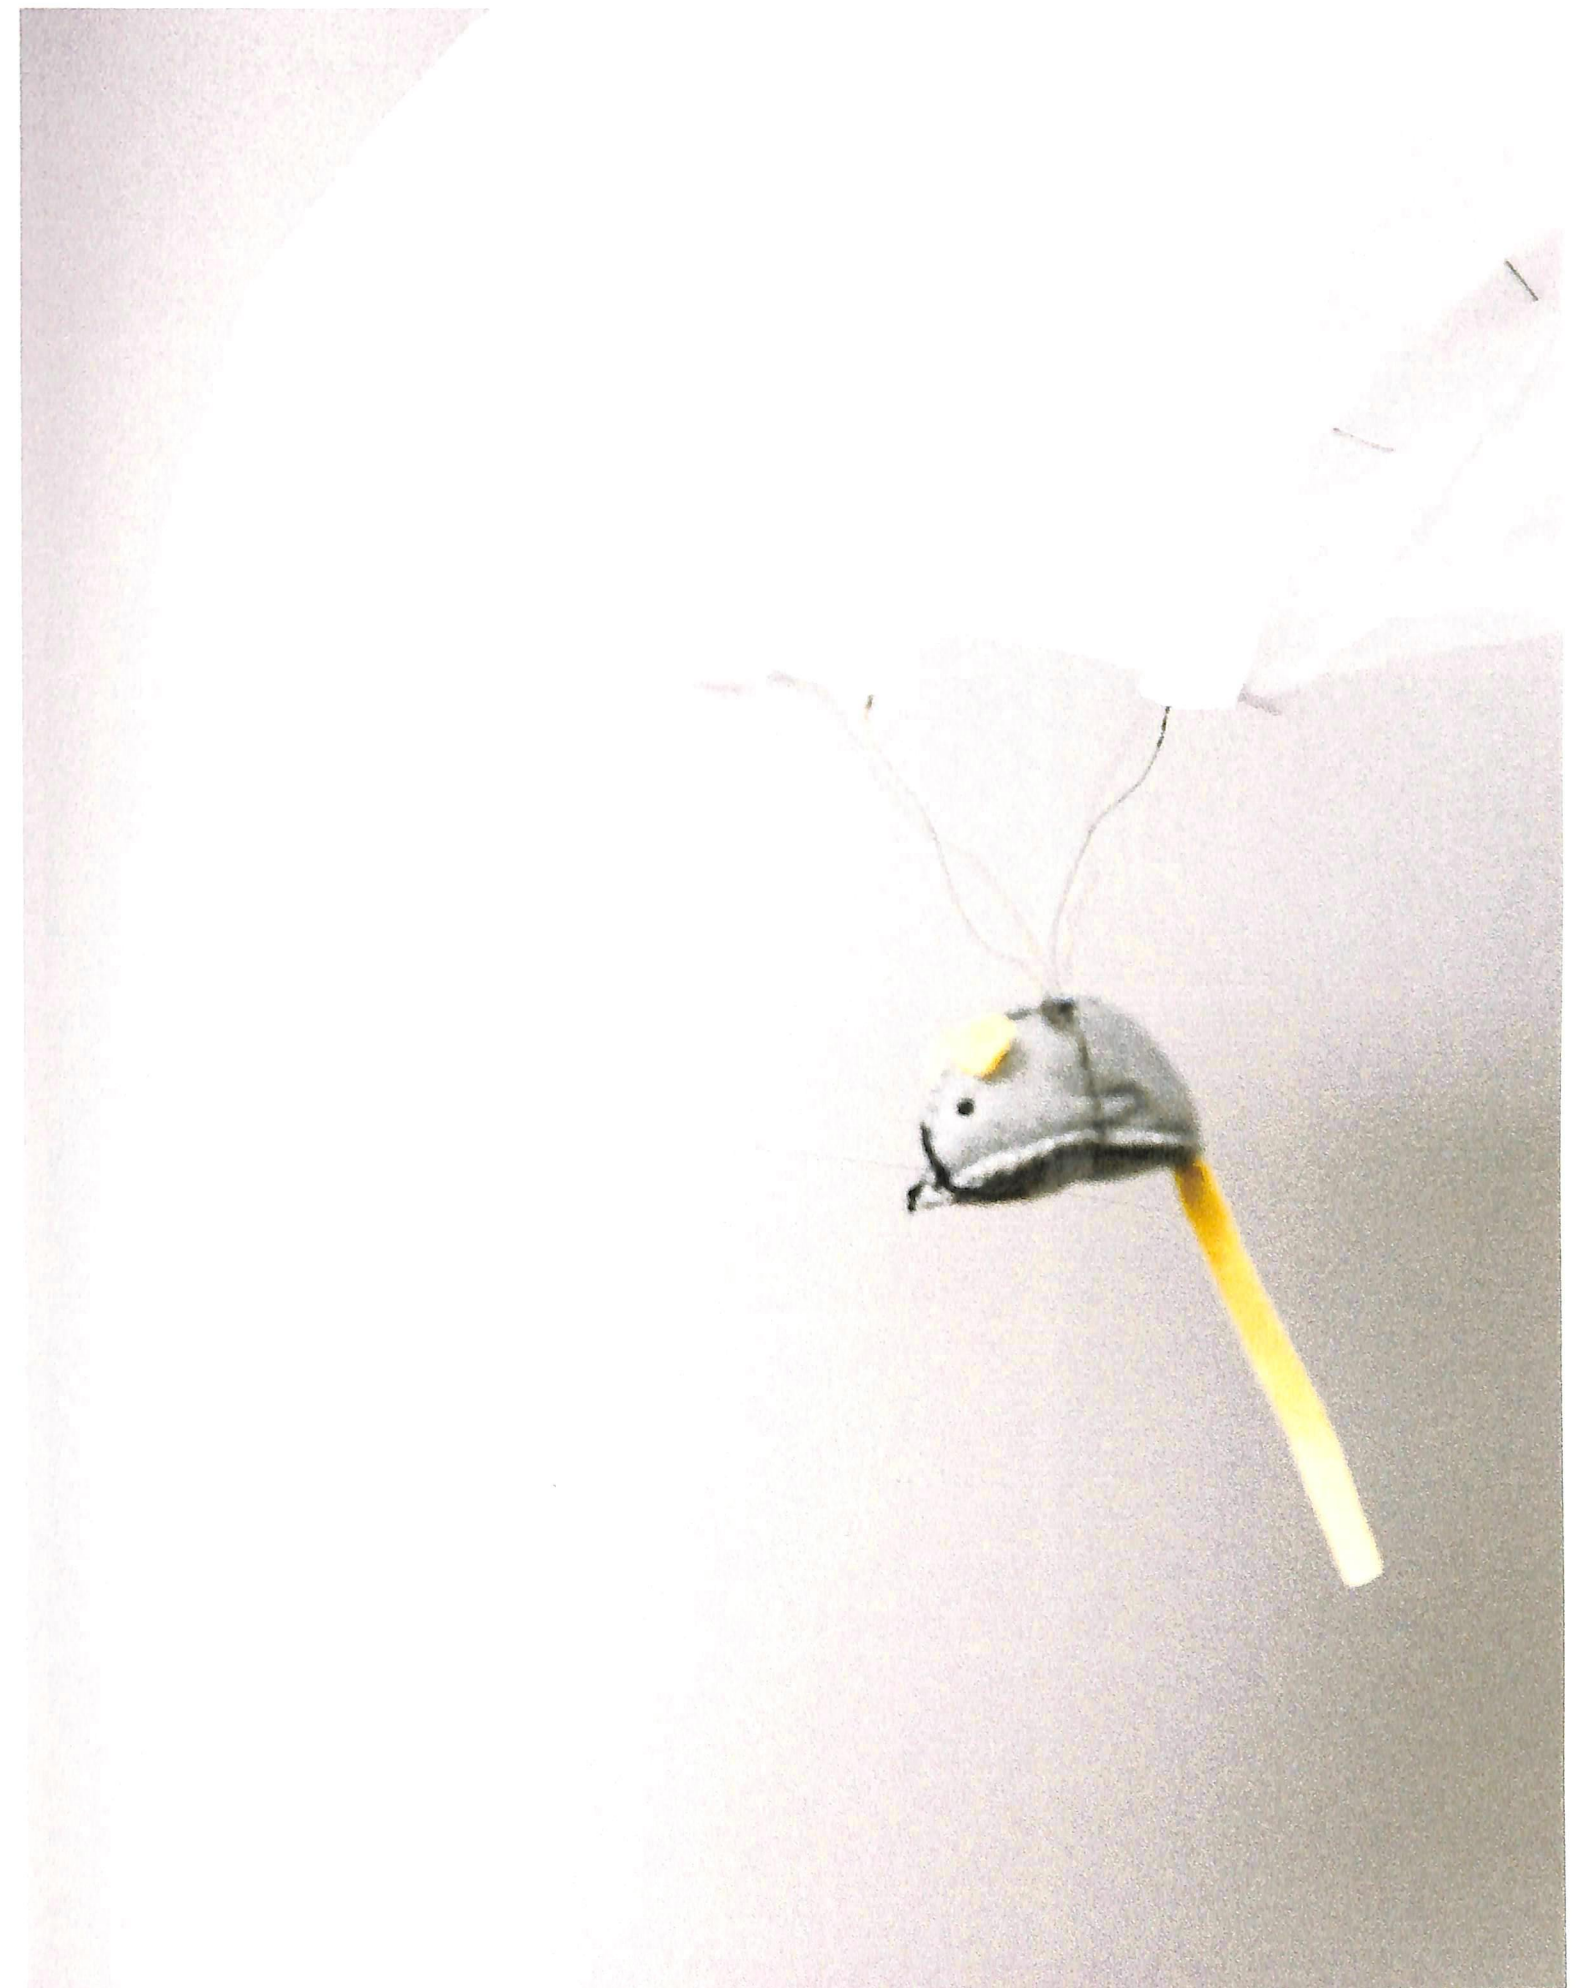

The time: Chapel hour.

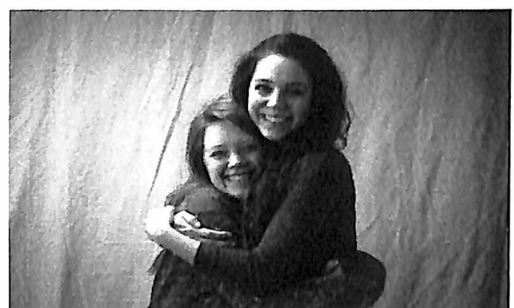

The scheme: Attach a bunch of mice to parachutes and let them rain down from the balconies upon the unsuspecting attendees.

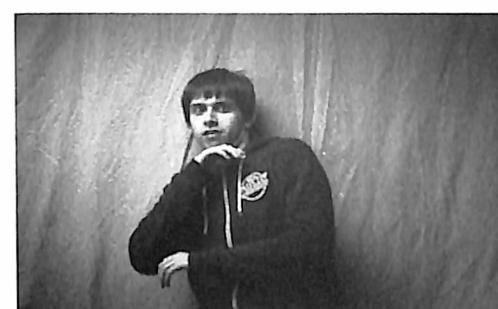

See, in my mind, mice are cute. However, I have to reconcile the fact that this may not apply to every other student (males and females alike), considering that they could end up on and in your hair. Also, I feel like this prank erred a little too closely to what many would call 'inhumane'. How can you really know if a mouse would opt for the sky-diving lifestyle?

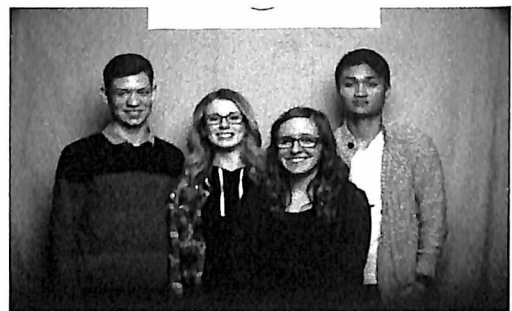

So, perhaps until our human-to-animal communication improves, it would be best to let stunts like this remain a thing of the past.

However, a word to the wise, don't fall asleep next time you're in chapel.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I wanted to become an engineer because of my dream to design medical devices. I really loved to see people return to normal life styles after injuries, and this caused me to be interested in the medical field, but I also felt God gave me a gift with numbers. I combined these two desires in the form of mechanical engineering, with the hopes of getting into biomedical engineering eventually.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I can think of a few roles that have displayed my involvement at George Fox University. This year I have had the pleasure of working with the Residence Life staff as an RA for Weesner Village. I have capped off my time with the engineering department by leading a senior design team as the project manager. I also have competed as a student-athlete for all four years at Fox in Cross Country and Track.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
Confidence is the best preparation.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
I would be Andrew Studer. 1. Andrew is a wonderful freshman who goes on all sorts of adventures to take gorgeous pictures of nature. Photography is my second favorite hobby, next to running, and I would loved to pursue it at the level he is. 2. He is incredibly handsome. 3. He is a freshman non- engineering major at Fox, so I would love to do it all over again without the mountain of homework.

Alyssa Emoto

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I chose Civil Engineering because I wanted to be able to see projects through from start to finish; to begin with almost nothing at the design and problem-solving stage and to eventually have a fully conceived physical end product. I thought that working in a field like Civil Engineering could potentially enable me to aid in improving our country's infrastructure like roads, bridges, and buildings would be extremely satisfying.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I don't know how large of a role I have played within the engineering department, but I do know that on the whole we are a pretty tight-knit senior class, which has definitely one of my favorite aspects of my years at Fox. I have also been an active member of the GFU Women's Tennis Team all four years at Fox; this year I have taken on the roles of both #1 singles and team captain.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
In my time at Fox, I have learned that it is totally okay to admit that you don't know what you're doing and to ask for help when you are struggling either to grasp a difficult concept or figure out how to solve a problem. After all, nobody is perfect and most likely you will be able to return the favor someday.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
Honestly, I'm not sure who I would pick if I could be any other GFU student or faculty. I have come to be pretty comfortable in who I am as an individual. That said, I think it would be really interesting to have been Dr. Spivey for a day since he used to work for the NSA before prior to his coming to teach at Fox.

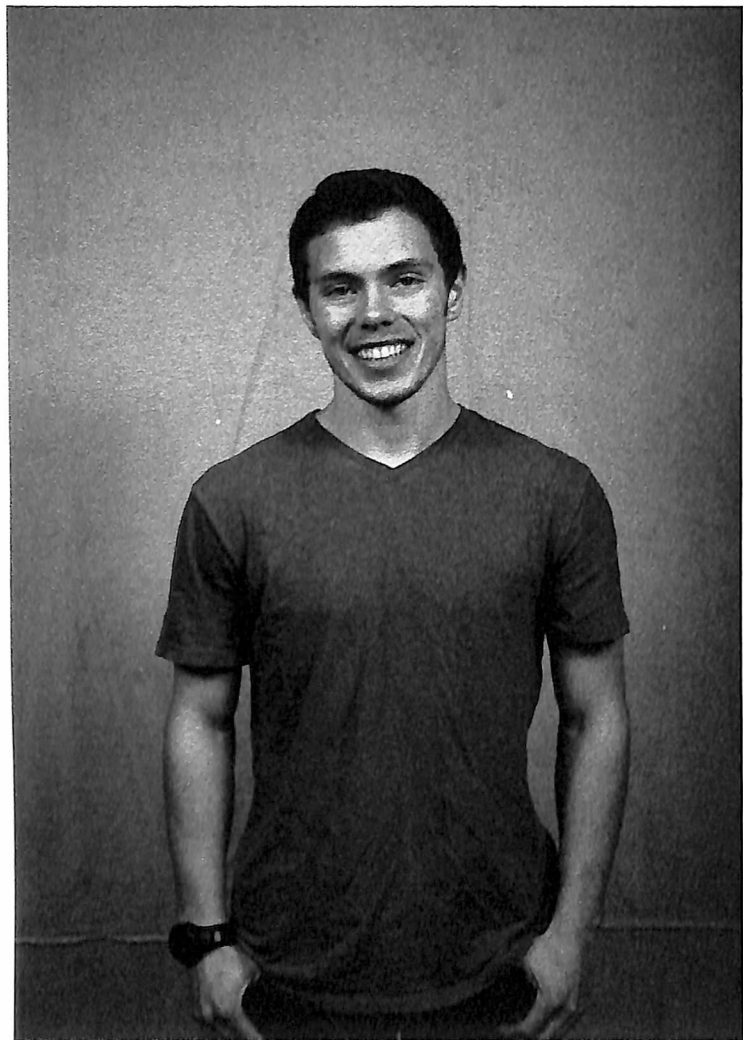

Lacey McNay

Lacey McNay

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I decided to be an elementary education major because I love learning and helping other people learn. Teaching is one of those jobs that is incredibly fulfilling. Plus I get to hang out with kids all day!
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
My junior year, I worked with other members of my ELED cohort to pilot an afterschool program at Edward’s Elementary School in Newberg. This program had minimal oversight by professors and was an opportunity for my classmates and I to grow as teachers. Clinical practice this early and involved is actually quite groundbreaking for undergraduate students. Because of this, professor Beth LaForce asked two other classmates and myself if we would help develop research to track it. Our research has already been presented at two conferences, one in Oregon and one in St. Louis, Missouri.
Another opportunity I had the privilege of being apart of was my sophomore year when I was an RA of Pennington 2 Women. This was one of best experiences I had while at Fox, that combined the cultivating relationships while taking part in leadership development! My two most memorable RA moments include trying to catch a mouse in my dorm room and two very different back-to-back late night trips to the ER!
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I have learned that the more you put in to (fill in the blank), the more you get out! Do something, get involved, lean into community, be vulnerable, be available and the college experience will be more memorable and meaningful for you! (But make sure that you give yourself some room to rest and recharge!)
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
I would be my little sister Libby McNay who is a freshman and still has three years left at Fox. It is bittersweet to be graduating and I am going to miss this place so much!

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I have a passion for running and inspiring others to be physically active. Majoring in HHPA gives me the opportunity to reach out to others through this medium and hopefully inspire them to achieve their goals, both in fitness and in life.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major /department as well as the GFU community?
I'm an active member on the cross country and track and field teams here at Fox, and have loved the opportunity to compete and represent Fox. Every time I tow the starting line, I represent George Fox and relish this opportunity to do so.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
School is stressful, embrace it. College is an awesome training ground for life in that you have a million things going on, and they all seem to be due at the same time. Do your best with what you can, give yourself time for naps or something you enjoy, mostly naps, and embrace your challenges.
- If you could be any other GFU student /faculty, who would you be and why?
Joseph Pia. Not only is he really, really fast (3k school record holder), but he has been an awesome source of encouragement and inspiration to everyone he comes in contact with. His positive attitude, dashing bow-ties, and encouraging example have inspired me in many ways.

I really, really like to run. Like, a lot.

Charissa Fuller

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I decided to major in Human Health and Performance to hopefully help kids someday as a Pediatric Occupational Therapist. I love working with kids and helping them to succeed and I would like to make an impact in the lives of kids who may be challenged in various ways.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major /department as well as the GFU community?
I have been a part of the George Fox Dance Company and I have taken part in the opportunities to become involved in the community at George Fox through various activities. As a transfer student, it was really easy to become involved and feel welcomed by the community at Fox because of the opportunities that are available.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
Even though I have only been a part of George Fox for a short amount of time, one of the most important life lessons I have learned is to be willing to be open to the opportunities that are presented to you and to get involved with them if possible.
- If you could be any other GFU student /faculty, who would you be and why?
If I could be any other George Fox student I would be Kira Wright. She is someone that is extremely inspiring and uplifting of others and can easily put a smile on your face. I admire the way that she values friendships and how much she loves the Lord and wants to share that with the world.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
There's something really fascinating about how people think and learn. What makes a person intelligent? How is it that we make decisions? My interest in cognitive science likely stems from my never-ending stream of wondering, particularly about what really goes on in the minds of human beings. Combining neuroscience concepts with programming, I would love someday to work for a company like Lumos Labs developing brain-training games on their website, Lumosity. Whether I'm designing games to help people stay sharp or researching AI to model learning behaviors of those with disabilities, my desire is for my knowledge to ultimately benefit other people. Understanding the brain might be considered one of the final frontiers... I'm excited to dive in.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
I currently serve as publicist for our school chapter of Sigma Zeta National Honors Society. Our club puts on a variety of events for science majors at Fox, including the Brain Brawl, our annual friendly competition with the Psychology club.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
It's okay not to be sure about your life tomorrow. It's never too late to redirect. Take a deep breath and trust God with today.

"The best thing about the future is that it comes one day at a time." - Abraham Lincoln!
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
Jacinda Thomas is a gem. I would love her heart for other people -- she gives the best hugs! She was my fantastic RA freshman year and is my sweet friend today :)

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I started at a young age by building intricate buildings and “products” out of legos. I was also good at math and science, so when the engineering program at my high school opened, I thought I’d try it out. It also helps that my dad was an engineer.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
You could say that I do a good job leading and I do my fair share of the assigned group work for projects. But honestly, one of the most important roles I have is being a good worker and follower when necessary. As for the community, I am the captain for the cross country team. I try and spread XC awareness by making our team known.
- What is one life lesson you’ve learned while here at Fox?
Don’t sweat the small stuff. I’ve found that one bad test or grade isn’t the end of the world. It definitely isn’t worth stressing to much over it. In the end, it won’t mean that much.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
He has legs that were sculpted by The Schwarzenegger himself.
He can speak French in Russian.
He can kill two stones with one bird.
Sharks have a week dedicated to him.
He has won the lifetime achievement award twice.
If he was to pat you on the back, you would list it on your resume.
He is the most interesting man in the world.
He is Aaron Molstad.

I have found that being positive goes a long way. Even if I’m in a bad mood, a smile will brighten the mood of the friends that surround me.

Allison Moss

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I decided to study mechanical engineering because of the challenge that it poses, and I do love a challenge.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I wouldn’t consider myself someone who just stands out in my major, but I do my best to be there for my classmates when they need help. I participate in labs in order to get the full experience, even when someone needs to remind me to put my safety glasses on. I enjoy going to class, just so long as I get my coffee in the morning.
- What is one life lesson you’ve learned while here at Fox?
A life lesson I’ve learned here at Fox is that college takes work. It takes work to build friendships, and to pass classes, and it is never easy leaving home.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
If I had to choose one person on campus, I’d want to be Erin Campbell. She’s such a great friend and is a hard worker. She doesn’t give up even when classes are tough. Plus, she’s studying the same major as me, which is just cool.

Being one of four Junior female engineers, classes are not always easy. But that has never held me back, as I’ve been blessed with a really tight knit group of friends that I get to go to class with every day.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I've always had a curiosity about how the world functions around me. My discipline allows me to pursue my curiosities about life and the natural sciences.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I have worked as a TA in several labs for the Department of Biology and Chemistry. I have also helped to prepare labs and ensure that everything is organized for when labs start.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I've learned to better manage my work load by taking each day as it comes instead of being overwhelmed. Its easy to look at the upcoming week and ask how I'm ever going to get it all done. Since being here at Fox I have learned focus more on the immediate concerns.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

I would be Zach Schultz. Zach has an amazing ability to brighten up any room that he enters with his light hearted spirit and sense of humor.

Megan Armentrout

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I started as a double major with missions and social work. Over time I realized that social work was my avenue for missions. I believe that the call of God on my life is to re-imagine community and empower people to see their inherent dignity and worth. I love the power of story, and I think there is something sacred about giving space for vulnerable people to be heard and valued.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

Honestly, my integral role is being a learner. I am constantly amazed by the wisdom that comes from my professors, the passion that comes from my fellow social work majors, and the journey that we all get to be on together. The encouragement that comes from this community has been key and because of that I have taken on leadership roles through the Spiritual Life Department and really grown in confidence through my social work internship experience.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I learned that we are made for community that is grounded in authenticity, honesty, and mutual brokenness. The community that I found here at Fox will forever be a benchmark for the communities I enter into after my time here. I have seen so much intentionality and beauty come from the people that I have been blessed to call friend. My mentors, professors, and friends have modeled the way of Christ to me in such a real and tangible way. This community has caused me to grow in ways that I never thought could happen, and that is what happens when you encounter a community like this- you can't leave without being changed.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Mary Owen: my barefoot, nature-loving, Christ-seeking, adventurous sister and friend. If I could have half the passion that she has, I'd be set. The way that she loves people is amazing and the joy that she carries with her is contagious. She's a gem.

Courtney Bennett

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I have felt called to serve vulnerable people- especially kids and families dealing with issues of abuse and trauma. I wanted more than just knowledge about the people I wanted to work with, and social work has given me the skills and experience to do what I love.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I don't know if I have played an integral role in the social work department, but I have been blessed to build relationships with the professors and women in my cohort. The sense of community and support in the department makes it easy to want to become involved in everything they do.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

Don't come to Cliff Rosenbohm's class late, unless you enjoy trying to dart out of the way of a Nerf gun. But on a more serious note, surrounding yourself with a community of people who can help you grow in your faith is invaluable.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Bre Munsell, because I don't know anyone who could take 27 credits (let alone my 15!) and be so loving, and happy (seriously, all the time, it's crazy).

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Economics is best defined as the study of the way people make decisions when faced with scarcity. I chose to study it because I find the world of incentives and trade-offs fascinating.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?

This past semester I participated in an economic development discussion group in which students of different disciplines came together and discussed issues faced by developing countries. It was a great opportunity for us all to share our ideas and learn from each other on a topic that we all really cared about.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I think the most important life lesson I learned at Fox is to never stop pursuing your passion. Especially with your work, it is important to do something you really care about.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?

If I could be any other Fox student I would be Kelly Uchiumi because I admire the way she was able to make the most of her time at Fox and she's a really fun person.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
Philosophy is a conjunction of two Greek words: Philia and Sophia. Philia is one of the Greek words for love. Sophia is the Greek word for wisdom. Philosophy then, quite literally means “love of wisdom.” It is this love that prompted me to major in philosophy. Not just a love for theoretical knowledge, the philosopher Emmanuel Levinas speaks of this love of wisdom as a “love of love.” In the love of wisdom, one learns to love a certain way of being, a certain type of life. The search for the good life encompassed by the love of wisdom. That is the essence of philosophy.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I think both my majors and departments, and the GFU community writ large, contributed incommensurately more to my own growth than I ever offered to it. If I played an integral role at all I hope it was in returning a small portion of the ideas, love, and life the community gave to me back to all the people who make George Fox such a wonderful place.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
Wisest is the person who knows that she does not know.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
Kent Chan. He knows why.

Jenny Newman

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
My original major upon coming to Fox was Politics- I want to be a District Attorney, and I am also fascinated by the subject. However, I took the Introduction to Philosophy course with Dr. Corwynn Beals during my first semester, and I fell in love with studying philosophy. I loved challenging the way I think about the world, and taking on new ideas and paradigms. Philosophy is like an adventure in the woods--it's easy to get lost, but it's also a beautiful and miraculous journey.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
During my Sophomore year, my good friend Tonya and I stepped up to lead the philosophy club, Sophilo. We were able to host philosophical discussing each week with both majors and non-majors on important topics such as God, gender, sexuality, and rights. I believe it is fundamentally important for all students to engage with philosophy, because it teaches us to expand our ways of thinking as well as to understand the importance of being logically consistent.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
That I am enough.
Although, this is a lesson I am still in the process of internalizing.
To keep it short... It is really hard to admit that I struggle, and that I cannot be perfect. I often hold myself to impossible standards, and fall apart when I cannot handle the load I have assigned myself. I have had to learn to take those situations and sort of laugh at myself and my standards.
I am a human being created by God in God's image, but not flawless. And that's okay. God does not hold me to impossible standards, but instead walks with me with grace, love, and mercy.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
Dr. Abigail Rine. She is so intelligent, funny, and beautiful. I have great respect for her, and the work she does as a professor as well as benefitting the greater GFU community.

Kali LeFebre

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I knew I wanted to major in something to do with business, but it wasn't until my meeting with Dirk Barram that I knew Finance was for me. During my first visit to Fox, he sat down with me and helped me to narrow down my specific major. My favorite part about Finance is how numbers tell a story and form a puzzle.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
I've only been on campus two years, but I still feel so welcomed and part of the Fox community. Specifically in the business department, I've worked in the tutor lab and am a team leader for VALYOO, a Senior Capstone team. Around campus I've worked in the Bruin Grounds, or Foxhole, whatever you prefer :). I'm also an intern in the Admissions Office, aiding in planning events and sharing with prospective students why Fox is such a great place. In every way I've been involved on campus I've always felt like an individual and so valued. The Fox family is so awesome!
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I've really learned a lot about trusting the Lord here at Fox. My time here has helped to push, shape, and mold me more into the person I want to be and ultimately into who the Lord wants me to be.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
Honestly I'm pretty busy figuring out who I want to be that there isn't much time to be anyone else. I feel so privileged to have spent time around so many amazing, unique, and genuine people, that everyone I've come in contact with has exemplified qualities that I would love to have!

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I have always been interested in science. It's fascinating to see the "behind-the-scene" of your daily life encounters. Things like why do people sneeze, what is dry ice made out from, how does flowers have different colors, and etc. I've always wanted to know why it happens or where does it come from. As I was introduced to science, I got to see more wonders and it took me in awe of God's works in us. Simple on the outside, but complicated on the inside. Also, as my professor said, "All science starts from chemistry."

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I have been helping my friends with their understanding of chemistry outside of being a TA in chemistry department. I'm also deeply involve in International Student Services as their intern, making GFU becoming more like home to international students and also creating events to promote the diversity we have in GFU so that the community could be more informed about other cultures that lives next to them. Another department that I have my intern with is the ELI department. I'm a TA and also a tutor in helping international students learning English.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

Being open minded: realizing that there are much more out there for us, dare to take the risks, and try to understand and learn those things, culture, and people without prejudices.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

I would still be me.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

As a Chemistry major, I get to learn about the processes that are foundational to our understanding of the natural world.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I have been involved in a number of ways within the Chemistry Department, including tutoring Freshmen in General Chemistry, being a TAS for Organic Chemistry, and serving as a Student Ambassador and giving tours to prospective students. We also have a very collaborative environment in the Chemistry Department, and all of the students work together on many projects; I think that I have contributed to that during my time here.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

During this past summer I conducted research at Fox, and during that time I encountered numerous difficulties. Working around them definitely taught me a lot about dealing with failure.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

I would be Zach Schultz, because he can grow some mean facial hair.

Hayley Delle

Age: 20

Major: Interior Design

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I chose Interior Design because I really, truly love it. It's something I could spend the rest of my life doing and be blissfully happy. I love antique furniture and old houses and I would cheerfully spend long days working in dusty old houses, listening to the stories they have to tell us. Because stories are beautiful and the best stories are the ones we have to work to uncover.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
For the last year I've been working with a national Interior Design association to promote student involvement and to encourage support for students within the Interior Design community. It's been a great opportunity for me to meet designers and students from across the nation and to foster these connections between students.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
Oh, one life lesson. How can I possibly pick just one? Perhaps one of the most important things I've learned is to take chances and try new things. Attend an event where you don't know anyone else. Apply for a job you're completely unqualified for. Take a class you've never heard of. These are the experiences that truly shape who you are here.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
This is by far the easiest question. I really want to be Sarita Gallagher. She's brilliant, funny and has such a passion for her students. If I could have just a fraction of that passion in the things I do, I'd be set for life. Not to mention her hair. I have a series case of Sarita Gallagher hair envy.

Mackenzie Murray

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I have a lot of questions about God, faith, and community. These two majors gave me the best opportunity to ask those questions with classmates and professors that were also seeking truth. Also, it just kind of happened.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
Well, I think I drink a cup of coffee from the Religious Studies Department every day. Other than that, my contribution has been the same as the amazing people I study alongside. You can't be in class with people like Beau, Miranda, Tashawna, Amberly, Harper, etc. and play an integral role. That's a silly answer, but it's frankly true.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
Fox has taught me that I've got quite a bit more to learn! Community is worth the investment, questions are worth asking, and the fight for justice is a worthy one. Fox has taught me to continue learning others' stories as a way to know further of the connectedness of creation and humanity.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
It's a tie between Rachel Morell and Barbi Doran. Barbi is pure joy to all those around her, and Rachel is authentic and hilarious.

Beau Brown

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I initially came to study Missions. After my first year of college I looked back, thinking about the classes I took and what I learned, and I realized that the Old and New Testament classes I had taken with Paul Anderson were by far the most interesting. So, I just enrolled in more Bible classes and then Junior year I finally declared Biblical Studies. I just became so obsessed and inspired with that Book as the product of a long history of writing, as a piece of literature and as a testimony that forces me to remember my position in the world and in time.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I think something that I have contributed to is the students' culture in our department. We feed off of each other's energy, inspiration and determination. It has been really important to me to do the best I can while I am here and I think that pushes others on to do the same. As far as the GFU community is concerned, I've gained so much more than I've given. I have had a few positions where I have facilitated an experience or conversation for folks, but I always leave feeling like I've been given so much. People here are so willing to give of their hearts and minds.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
The greatest lesson that I've learned is that having your viewpoint/worldview/paradigm (whatever you'd like to call it) challenged is a very holy thing. If you think of this challenge like pruning, as an act that hurts, but ultimately leads to new and better growth, it may cut off a lot, but you will grow immeasurably. Also, the only way to grow like that is to involve yourself with people who are very different from you.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
I would love to see the world from Rhett Luedtke's perspective. Rhett not only does an amazing job teaching them, but the actors at our school are incredibly talented. To see people change and grow in that field and see the step-by-step of the process would be amazing. Plus, he has been involved with a thing called "applied theatre" which is an amazing, amazing idea. To see it in action would be profound.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

For as long as I can remember film has been an important part of my life. From making dump shorts in my friend's backyards in middle school to watching all night marathons a lot of my greatest memories have revolved around movie making and the magic that it brings. Whenever I was going through a rough time as a child, I would turn to movies to help me escape or better understand the complicated messes of life and I want to be able to make something that can be that to another person.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I'm the current chair of the Fox Film Festival and have been a member of the committee since sophomore year. I also have worked on various films in my four years and have worked on several theatre projects as well.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

That you really never know who a person really is until you take the time to talk with them and learn about them. I think when we live in such a small community with a specific lifestyle message, it's easy to assume that everyone has similar ideas but meeting so many people who surprised me with their opinions and attitudes has really been an eye opener.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Caroline Hudson, a fellow senior because she is always hard working and dedicated and extremely busy but never complains!

Coffee can mean different things to different people. Some may consider it a simple component of their lifestyle — a method by which to maximize their day's potential. Others consider it to be much more — a motivator, a lifestyle, a craft to swear upon. Regardless of one's view of the beverage, there is a seemingly unifying factor to this otherwise complex good. This factor is community, something that undoubtedly drives the unique experience at George Fox. Enter any of Newberg's premier coffee houses over the weekend (or even during the week) and the expanse of Newberg citizens is constantly intermingled with Fox students. They are either busy studying, finishing essays, or covering ground with a friend or fellow student. Newberg coffee culture has the same sense of entrepreneurship and rugged individualism seen in our acclaimed neighbor, Portland. The Coffee Cottage and Caravan Coffee are stellar examples of businesses beginning against the grain of widespread franchises and a normalized taste for corporate icons. These local businesses have gone the extra mile to do things their way and they excel at it.

Portland's own Stumptown coffee is one of the most well-known independent coffee roasters in the nation, alongside Intelligentsia coffee from Chicago, Illinois and Counter Culture from Raleigh-Durham, North Carolina. The local pride and partnership of Stumptown and its constituents may be witnessed at both Chapters Books & Coffee and Red Hills Market in our neighboring city of Dundee.

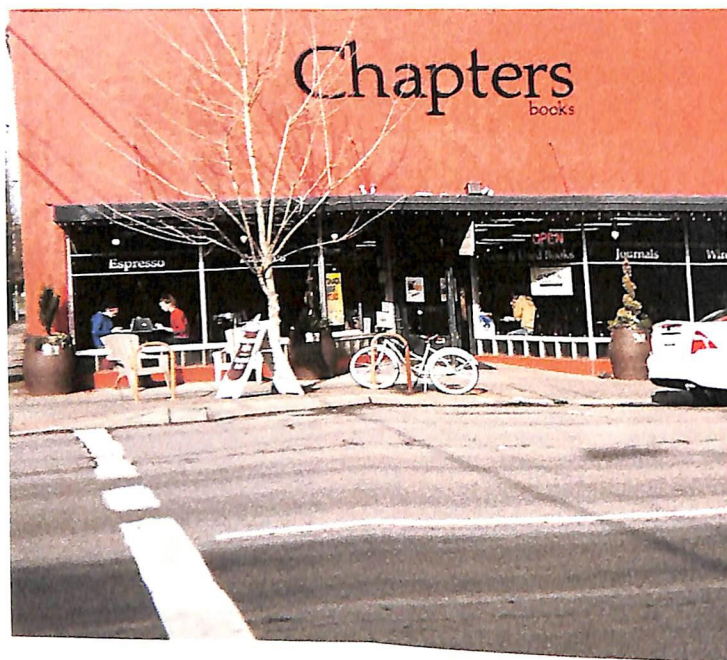

Considering the high regard and effort of these purveyors, there is participation in a more overarching factor. We are currently experiencing what most cultural experts would call Third Wave Coffee; a time and practice where quality and presentation are extremely important.

The first wave was the 19th-century surge that put tins of Folgers via a percolator on every table, and the second was market penetration, or perhaps capitalism in action, starting in the 1960s with the Bay Area's Peet's and becoming a streamlined experience via the Starbucks "grande skinny latte."

Now, the focus of both consumers and purveyors has shifted inward. Roasters attend to individual types of beans as if they were their own children, in order for the individual flavors and characteristics to flourish. These crops never lose their identity, and are sourced from farms and regions instead of "some exotic country on the map."

Considering the level of intentionality on the part of the owner, it could be seen as only proper to reciprocate this enthusiasm of craft and friendship with those we love. Take the opportunity they provide to meet someone new. Take in these encounters with an open mind, expectant of great things, just as one's lips breach the velvety microfoam topping of a well-crafted latte.

The coffee culture may serve as a powerful and vivid example not only to culinary enthusiasts and entrepreneurial spirits, but to the student wishing to reach out and participate in community with one another. A sense of normalization and perhaps even openness is contributed by these establishments — a quality of friendship invaluable to the continuing betterment of our community. If you still consider yourself a stranger to this experience, allow yourself to be introduced to this element with a friend, old or new. Enjoy something new off the menu, or perhaps a different brew method. Enjoy the beverage as a channel for community and serendipity.

Under the direction of Pat Vandehey, The Symphonic Band is a touring ensemble that plays concerts throughout the Northwest, composed of students from all different walks of life. Although there are auditions to be a part of the group, one doesn't have to be a Music Performance or Music Education major in order to participate.

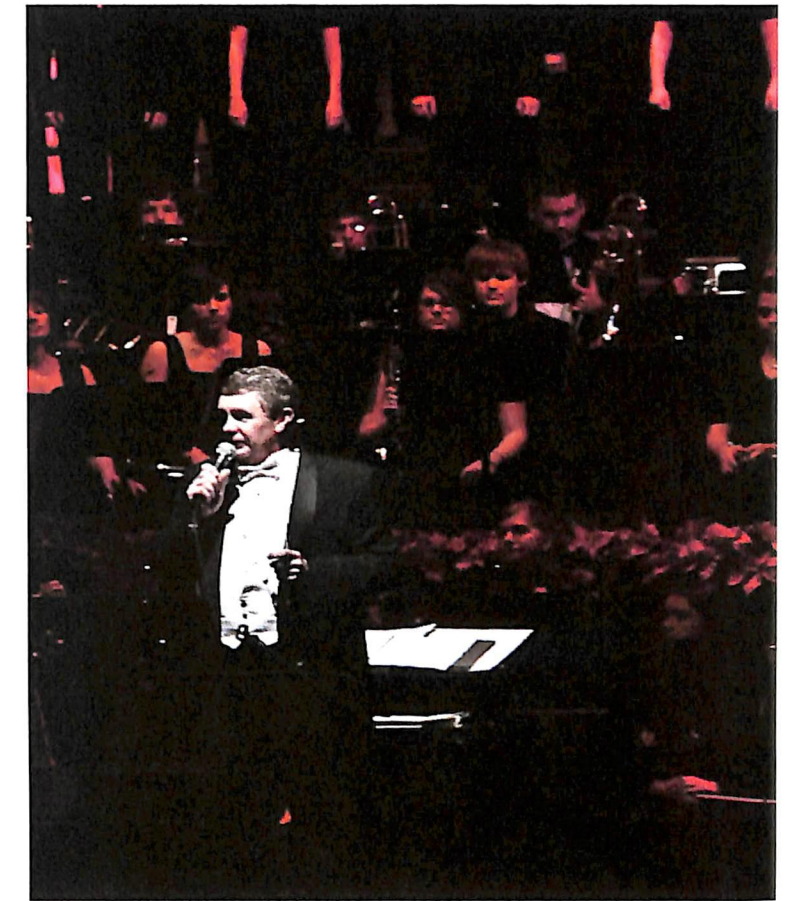

The Symphonic Band has chaplains who lead devotions once a week with the group, praying with those in need and walking alongside each other in a beautiful sort of musical community. This community exists not only among band members, but also among the music department as a whole as many members participate in several different groups or ensembles on campus.

While the concert choir is rehearsing for the Christmas Concert, the Symphonic Band is hard at work preparing several riveting, moving and dynamic pieces of their own. Along with being students, many of the band members participate in music opportunities elsewhere ranging from leading worship at their home church to tutoring and mentoring younger members of the Newberg Community.

Under the direction of Loren Wenz, the George Fox University Concert Choir is the most advanced choral mixed ensemble. While practices may be very focused and maintain an air of professionalism, the group functions as a tight-knit family, having devotions once a week and offering a welcoming presence to both old and new members alike. Practices are four times a week, two of which are devoted to the entire ensemble and one day each for both men's and women's groups, with the intent of bringing to surface areas of improvement and coming back together as a stronger group. The ensemble has several concerts throughout the school year, including the impressive and heartwarming Christmas Concert. They are joined by many other vocal and instrumental ensembles to produce a sell-out show year after year, with music to match the theme and title of the event. The entire process is a collaborative effort that combines lighting, sound, decorations, music, and story to provide the audience with a moving and peaceful experience. The GFU Concert Choir performs in many competitions and continues to devote much of their time to serving the greater Newberg Community through music and fellowship.

TOWNSCAPES II

RUDDICK/WOOD

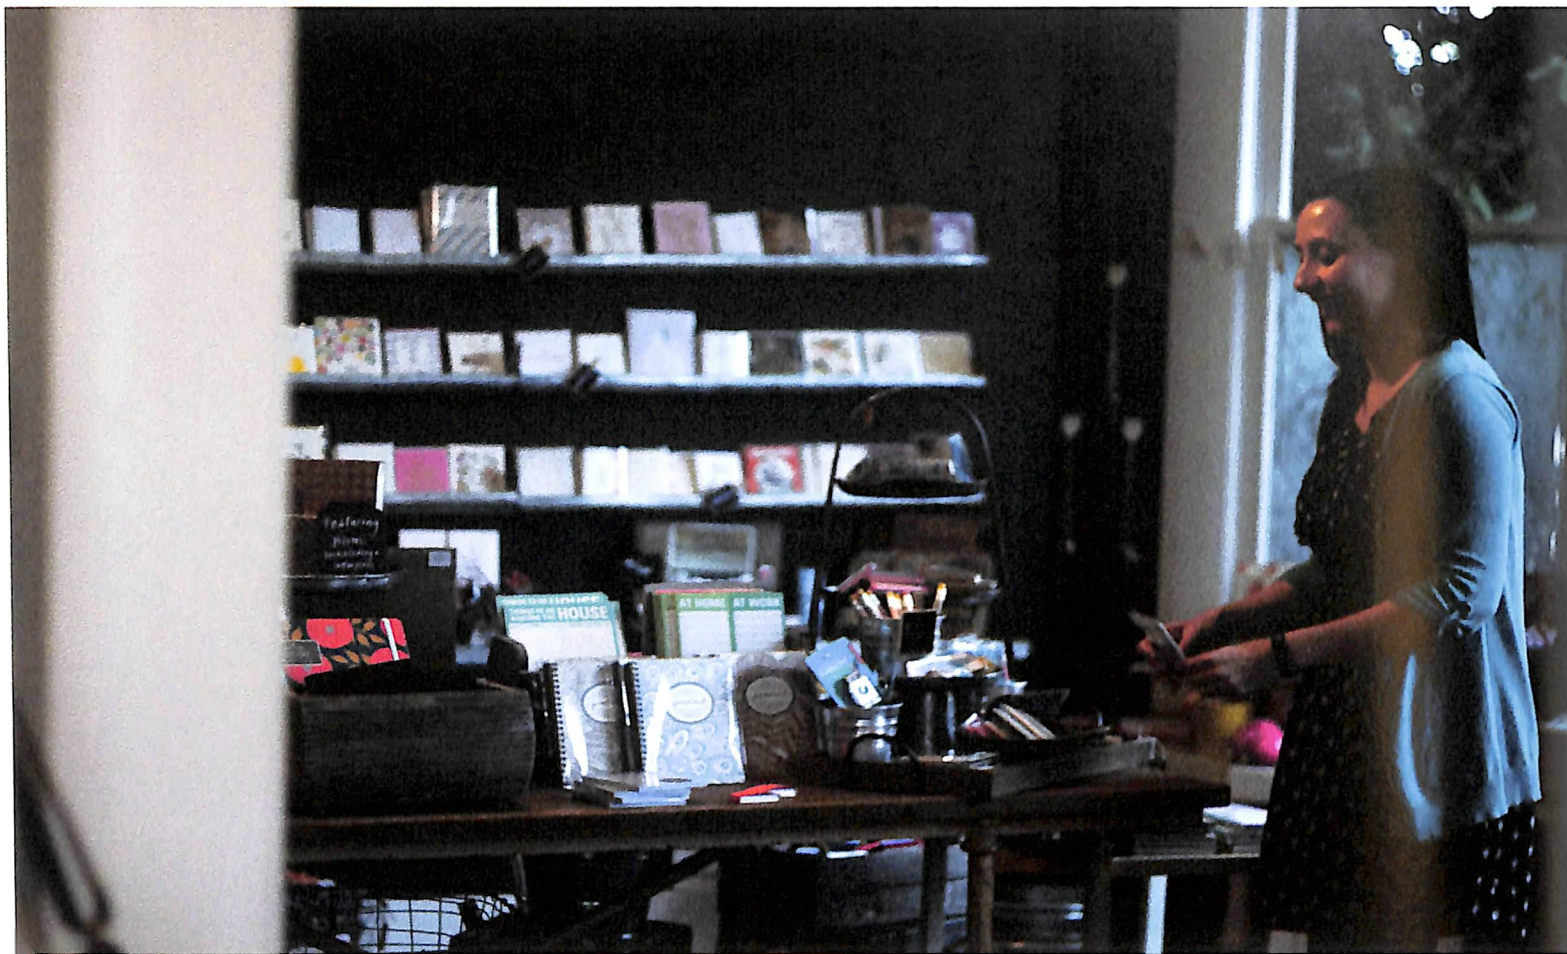

720 E. 1st Street
Newberg, OR 97132

Owners Kyle Lattimer and Paul Losch came together to create Ruddick/Wood on a chance encounter.

“Kyle operated the Uprooted food-cart in Newberg for a couple of years, and when the building where Ruddick/Wood is now became available for rent, he sold the cart and picked up the lease. A couple of months later, in December of 2012, I was beginning to form an idea for opening a restaurant in the area and was looking for work in Newberg so I could get to know the town a bit better. Kyle had an ad out looking for a chef for a new concept and I responded. Through a few meetings in early 2013 we decided to combine our efforts and start working on what is now Ruddick/Wood. From January of 2013 on we just spent a lot of time brainstorming names, ideas, design, and then working on the space, opening the Tavern at the end of November. In reality, we’re still working on the space, with the dining room set to open in the next several weeks,” says Paul. The concept for the name came from the rich history of the Newberg area. “Ruddick and Wood were the family names of the first two families to purchase land in the area and plot it out as a business area known as ‘Newberg,’ in the 1880s.

Ruddick and Wood were the first to envision the possibility of a bustling downtown area that would grow with the arrival of the railroad. Unfortunately, they were a little too ahead of their time and actually sold their property to Jesse Edwards, who was developing his own plot of land at the time and who is now known as ‘the father of Newberg.’” Now, George Fox students can enjoy the sophisticated environment as a place to hang out that is not a full bar or simply another coffee shop. Paul and Kyle hope Ruddick/Wood will continue to be that gathering spot for both students and faculty. “We want to provide an enjoyable experience to people through thoughtfully sourced and carefully prepared food and drink, served in a friendly environment,” says owner Paul. It is an exciting time for Newberg as locally owned businesses such as Ruddick/Wood contribute to what hopes to be a season of blossoming in the downtown area. It provides yet another location for students to gather together to create lasting community, surrounded by great food and the kind hearts of the Newberg Family.

PULP & CIRCUMSTANCE

117 S. College St.
Newberg, OR 97132

Ashley and Jennifer became fast friends when they moved to Newberg. Both being from big cities and both sharing a love of letter-pressed cards, they created a connection and decide to build their own card business. Together they purchased a letterpress and began working on letters. The idea to open a card and paper shop became a reality when a house became available and Pulp & Circumstance became much more than they could have dreamed. The first portion of the store's name, "Pulp," originated from the girls' love of paper goods. The "Circumstance" is a play on "Pomp and Circumstance," which is a celebration with a lot of fuss. "We thought, 'Oh! That's perfect for a gift shop. A celebration store.'" Beyond paper goods,

Pulp & Circumstance curates local products and artwork, even featuring several works by George Fox students. Above all, their goal is to feature as many locals as possible, as well as providing their customers with great service and a great shopping experience. Pulp & Circumstance also has a newsletter specifically for students, which provides discounts every once in a while. Any time a George Fox student comes into the store, they automatically receive a 5% discount when they say they are from George Fox. Ashley and Jennifer love receiving input and suggestions and encourage people to recommend product offerings and events to make the store even better and a closer part of the community.

NEWBERG BAKERY

621 E. 1st Street
Newberg, OR 97132

March ushered in the beginnings of a new era in Newberg. On a beautiful day the doors to the Newberg Bakery swung wide open and owners Brenda and Bruce finally saw a dream that was thirteen years in the making become a reality. Brenda had previously worked for George Fox, where she loved serving the community and making people feel at home - this is the same hospitality both she and Bruce wish to instill within the walls of their bakery.

“Our values are community, simplicity, and beauty. We just want our food to reflect those values”.

The Newberg Bakery is set apart from other venues as they want to cater specifically to the locals and college students. They wish to do this by pricing their menu so that college students can easily afford food and by providing a multitude of gluten free options. They serve delicious pastries and bagels, pizza by the plank, sandwiches, and a simple soup or salad for lunch. Once a month they are hoping to stay open late into the night to let college students come in while Bruce is making cinnamon rolls or other baked goods to hang out, study, or to grab a midnight snack. It is a place for students “to feel welcome ... and not be a place where someone is waiting for them to clear a table,” says Bruce. Above all else, he and Brenda want to make an impact on the Newberg community, to be a place where people come and feel welcomed, cared for, and served.

It began at noon in late October. Professionals, students, alumni, and people from all around the Pacific Northwest joined together for the bowl-a-thon. Their goal was to throw 2,200 bowls in order to hold an Empty Bowls Dinner this spring. The dinner “is all about gathering everybody together for a great big huge communal meal and raising money for an important cause,” says Mark Terry.

This year, the Art Department’s important cause is near to everyone’s hearts. In November 2012 Doug Campbell was assailed with a massive stroke. He has been a professor at George Fox for twenty two years and founded the art department. He is also one of the most widely published and exhibited artists in the Christian College Coalition. When he suffered his stroke, thousands of people were affected. Right now, although he is recovering very well, his speech is inhibited. The Art and Design Department is raising money to send him to speech camp. Mark Terry described the condition as such: “basically what it boils down to is his limited speech is this thing that is like a dam, that all of his ability to speak is stuck behind him. A little leaks out here and there—we want to break the dam.” The therapy required for Doug is not covered by insurance and when the Campbells were being forced to dig into their retirement fund in order to pay the gap, Mark Terry said, “not on our watch.” For this year’s Empty Bowls Dinner, all the proceeds will go to Doug’s speech camp.

WOOD-MAR AUDITORIUM

This winter, the George Fox University Theatre department showed the musical Parade, a heartwrenching story of racism and anti-semitism in post-Civil War Georgia. The musical dramatizes the 1913 trial of Jewish factory manager Leo Frank, who was accused and convicted of raping and murdering a thirteen-year-old employee, Mary Phagan. The trial, sensationalized by the media, aroused antisemitic tensions in Atlanta and the U.S. state of Georgia. When Frank's death sentence was commuted to life in prison by the departing Governor of Georgia, John M. Slaton due to his detailed review of over 10,000 pages of testimony and possible problems with the trial, Leo Frank was transferred to a prison in Milledgeville, Georgia, where a lynching party seized and kidnapped him. Frank was taken to Phagan's hometown of Marietta, Georgia and was hung from an oak tree. The events surrounding the investigation and trial led to two groups emerging, the revival of the defunct KKK and the birth of a premier Jewish Civil Rights organization. Parade is a musical capturing a story of unconditional love and trust amidst life's trials and uncertainties.

CLUBS II

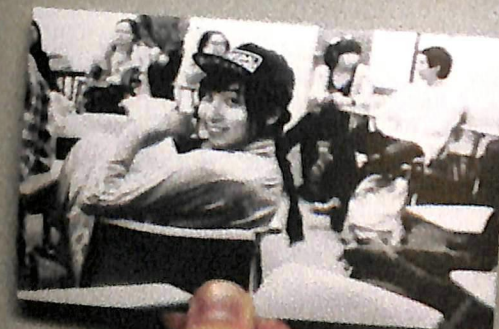

Accounting Club

The accounting club is about preparing and equipping accounting majors for successful careers. The club connects juniors to accounting firms and internships. On Saturdays, the club hosts the VITA, a free program that connects students to community members to help low income families and students save money on taxes. Students build leadership skills and organize events throughout the year.

One student prepared a tax return for a woman who brought a pet chicken in with her and admitted, "I didn't know chickens could be stroked." Not many people know much about accountants in general, but the club helps people understand that accountants are actually interesting with lives and senses of humor. A lot of accountants even participate in sports, plus the club has free pizza sometimes.

International Club

The International Club is about blending groups to create a diverse community of people. The majority of the members are international students. American and international students participate together in cultural activities such as NBA games, the Lunar New Year, trips to the pumpkin patch, Christmas gift exchanges, and trips to the coast. The goal of the international club is to connect international and American students and create conversations that blend varying cultural backgrounds. Chinese Lab is a major part of the International Club, which allows English speakers to learn Chinese and helps students understand each other better. The club creates a safe place for students to talk about the struggles in their lives, learn how to be leaders, and understand each other's perspectives. The club welcomes everyone, not just international students.

Sophilo

The purpose of this organization is to facilitate community amongst the philosophy majors, minors, and other philosophically inclined. Sophilo gatherings provide a venue for philosophers to open their internal dialogue into a conversation in which we explore the nature of love, knowledge, and our own ethical responsibility. The organization seeks to cultivate a climate in which philosophers help to shape the minds and hearts of one another, making us all better philosophers for the sake of wisely loving another human being. Our desire is to promote interest in philosophy among GFU students.

Social Work Club

The social work club is about responding collectively to the social issues and concerns involving the marginalized and oppressed. Social workers value human dignity and the worth of every individual and respond alongside those who experience social injustice, abuse, trauma, and difficult life circumstances. The club is meant to serve as a way that provides the framework for applying theory and research to serving within and outside our community. The club organizes events for those who are interested in volunteering to help serve.

For instance, a big event this year was open to the public to learn about Human Sex-Trafficking and what it looks like nearby in Portland. The social work club provides an inside opportunity to see how people can be selfless, passionate, and grateful. It encourages students to see how blessed they are and demonstrates the need for community. The social work club is a vehicle for anyone who cares about service and is passionate about people. You do not have to be a social work major. The sky is the limit with social work, so you're only as limited as your imagination.

Nursing Club

The George Fox Nursing Club is dedicated to reaching out to the community while building fellowship within the school of nursing. It's purpose is to help spread the joy and happiness of Jesus Christ to everyone. The nursing club enables students to develop relationships with students of every class. This club provides a place where students can come together and encourage one another through the mutual joy of nursing. Participating in this club helps students receive direction and great advice from other students, whether that advice be academic or not. The club teaches nursing majors to engage in the community at Fox and throughout the city of Newberg. Nursing is about meeting the needs of those around us, which is a fundamental focus of the club. Each year, the Red Cross blood drive allows students to see the campus and community come together to give blood. The blood drive emphasizes the point of the club: to help others. When this blood drive day rolls around, it also gives club members the opportunity to volunteer with one another and meet others in the community and school. The Nursing club provides opportunities and resources to come together as friends and serve the community with love.

Gospel Choir

The Gospel Choir is a family of Spirit-led worshippers that crave to glorify God and minister to others through song. Meetings begin with short sermons from campus pastors, followed by crazy long practices full of movement and rhythm. The choir performs at campus events and travels to a variety of off-campus locations to worship with different communities. Off-campus trips have included Greater Solid Rock in Portland and a nearby prison. Members of the Gospel Choir are devoted to constant encouragement and ministering to those around them. They celebrate the Lord by expressing heart-worship with their voices.

FACULTY II

KELLY CHANG

Assistant Professor of Psychology

Since my life mission is to understand, illuminate, and inspire God's purposes in people's lives, I found myself easily drawn to George Fox University, where college students are searching for God's calling and purpose for them. So I came here in 2006 straight out of graduate school. Here I have the privilege of helping students—whether or not they are psychology majors—discover how God designed us to think, act, and feel in so many complex ways. From the engineering student who tells me, “I didn't know your field could be so useful!” to the psychology student who wins a scholarship to do independent research with me on the mission field in Nicaragua, presents at conferences, and then continues the work in graduate school, I have had many rewards along the way. My advice to students is this: Your main purpose in life is to trust God. Trust your Savior to work out the details of your life in surprising, pleasing, and sometimes last-minute ways. You may change your major, struggle in relationships, or find a new passion from an unexpected source. That is okay. As long as you are trying your best with the resources and directions you have today, and as long as you keep learning and growing, you will find incredible blessing. Today's struggle will be tomorrow's lesson learned. Just hold on. And when you get the chance, dance!

She really wants to help her students learn and willing to invest in our lives! She has a passion for what she does as a teacher and really loves the Lord.

~Anonymous student

KATHY WEISS

M.D., Assistant Professor

1) How long have you been working at Fox?

On and off since 1999. I started as a physician in the health and counseling center and started teaching in about 2005 first as adjunct and then as “visiting” professor then as a real one.

2) What is it that first drew you here?

I live and have worked in Newberg for the last 25 years, so I was already here.

3) Funniest / most memorable student interaction?

I try hard to get students to visualize the processes in the body and frequently act them out.

One year it was the Cushing’s disease boogie. I mimed the disease symptoms several different times, finally in one class after I performed, there was a corporate intake of breath as they finally understood. I took a bow!

4) Do you have any particular advice to students?

Live like a college student until you pay the debt off. Let it go and let God deal with it!! I don’t want you taking care of me if you don’t know your stuff!

She is extremely knowledgeable and although she pushes her students harder than most professors, she truly cares about them and does what it takes to help them succeed.

~Anonymous student

Paddles are so underrated.

I mean, with a sturdy paddle at your side you can man a canoe through rushing rapids, make a mean score during an intense game of ping-pong, and prod freshman around on the quad.

You think I'm kidding. But guess again!

As you previously read, the 80's and prior were a strange strange time at George Fox University. Parachuting mice ran rampant, the possum population was booming (picture the massive number of squirrels we currently have, and that's basically how bad it was), the security staff was completely student operated, and the idea of 'mixed dorm' situations was still considered a controversial topic.

Essentially, one week out of every year, the freshman class was given blue and gold beanies to wear. When donned in this particular cap, the upperclassman were allowed the liberty of prodding them around with paddles as well as making them carry their books. Given, it was meant in good jest - but still, really?

It wasn't until sometime around '45 or '49 when a new president took office at the university that the tides turned. In a triumphant rush, he broke all the paddles and declared that freshman students wouldn't wear the beanies any longer (as tradition had dictated). This is all to be taken with a grain of salt - but as far as sources go, Clyde Thomas was the one who passed along the story. If anyone were to know, the Director of Plant Services and past Fox alumni would be the best to reference.

SPRING

It's spring fever. That is what the name of it is. And when you've got it, you want - oh, you don't quite know what it is you do want, but it just fairly makes your heart ache, you want it so!

~ Mark Twain

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
Originally I was going to double major in entrepreneurship and interior design, but after taking my first accounting class, I realized that I loved it and was good at it, so making it my major just seemed logical to me.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
I was a team liaison for the Justice for Fraud Victims Project and worked closely with five other team members and the Portland Police Department to aid in solving fraud cases.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I've learned the value of priorities, and how if you have the wrong ones, life becomes a lot more difficult.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
If I could be any other student or faculty, I would be Professor Lauri Smith. She is so fun loving, artistic, travels frequently, and has such a kind heart for others, all of which are reasons why I have continued to work for her over the past 3 years.

Tausha Rene

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I grew up around business minded people, and that has always been a realm that I feel comfortable in. When it came time to pick a major I tried to find one where I would be able to use my specific strengths and skills within the business world that I love. Math and numbers have always been my strong point, so I decided to start out with Accounting and it turns out that I love it!
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
This year I have been able to serve as the ASC Vice President of Finance (aka Treasurer), and it has really been a blast. I wasn't expecting to be in this role, but when the opportunity arose I stepped in, terrified. It has been such an amazing experience, and I have learned so much. My favorite part has been having the ability to apply the things I am learning in my Accounting classes in the real world, and also in a way that benefits the George Fox community.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
There will always be more deadlines, to-do's, and assignments to be done. I will never be happy or feel like I have accomplished anything of value if I can't step back and look at the bigger picture of what I'm doing and where I'm going, and more importantly what God is doing through me and where He is leading me.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
Celena Nafarrate is one strong woman of God. She is always pushing me to be more authentic and is one of the most trustworthy people that I know. I am not alone in saying that she is one of the few people who can make you feel understood and cared for just in the way that she listens. Carrie Gradin has an extremely diverse worldview and I am always inspired by the perspective that she brings to the table. She encourages me to continue to step outside of my box and look at the world in a different way. Halie Potter, a Fox student last year, inspires me by being one of the most generous and caring people I have ever met. It blows my mind how quickly she is willing to drop everything at any time to help somebody out if they need it.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I started with athletic training, switched to marketing half-way, now at youth ministry. I love young children and serving them (mostly the activities), being around them makes me feel young and energetic.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
I've been involved with PA, ASC, and international club for two years, planning on the third. Interactions with international students contributed to my learning on how to act out the gospel and create vicarious experience.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
It is impossible to satisfy others' needs especially when everyone is looking at you to make something happen, work hard, work smart, do my best and God will take care of the rest.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
From the first day I met Christine Wang, she had always kept her uplifting spirit around people (except for once that I got her mad). She has been a blessing to people around her and as well as to those she had served.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I actually came to Fox because of the nursing program. As a senior in high school I took nursing classes at the community college and also attended high school courses. I thought I had everything planned out. It was at Fox that I took a drawing class to fulfill a general education credit and I realized that creativity and art was something that allowed me to fully express myself. It was the feeling of creating art and the naturalness that it flowed out of my veins that caused me to realize I loved art & design. So I switched my major and the rest is history.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
During my time here at Fox, I have been blessed to be given so many opportunities to serve. The past three years I have been able to serve the Fox community as the Spiritual Life creative director & producer. I loved that I was able to apply what I was learning in design/art classes to something in real life. For the past two years some highlights of some things/events that I have been involved in would be the co-creative director of the 2013 Best Picture Film within the Fox Film Festival & multiple Visual Art Department events.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I have learned that when you pour into someone you will learn so much about them and about yourself. I have also learned that being part of a community that challenges you but also be a place where you are not afraid to bust a dance move will keep you well rounded.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
I would chose to be Rusty St. Cyr. His heart for others and willingness to approach them wherever they are at emotionally, relationally, and spiritually is something that I strive to have. I also really admire his sense of humor and how he is able to make certain awkward situations not so awkward. Working closely with him the past three years, I have seen how he has been such a mover & shaker on this campus and this is something I want to do wherever I might be. Plus he has cool style.

Miranda DeVore

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I decided to become an art major after having a family loss that made me see that I wasn't striving after what I was gifted with and that if I want to make the most of the time here I'd better be doing it with the skill set that I was given.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?
I became part of the art department family my second semester at Fox. I had a hard time at first, but I pushed myself and then was offered a position as a workstudy student for the department. That role pushed me to seek out community in the department and to find the holes and try to fix them with small groups or even just the challenge of knowing everyone by name.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I have learned that if you truly are passionate, you will be supported by those around you. Essentially I have learned to trust.
- If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?
I would have to choose Cheri Hampton if I could be anyone else on campus. For those that don't know who she is, she is the woman who basically runs the art and design department. She has a graceful, humors, caring, and always genuine spirit. Her integrity could never be matched and with out her I think my time at Fox would have been completely different (in a bad way). She has taught me so many valuable things but most of I think she is one of the best role models on campus. If you get the chance stop by the office and tell her how awesome she is because she deserves to know what an amazing person she is.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I was introduced to animation in elementary school and loved it. I started teaching myself and discovered that I could actually study it in college.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
Most of the reason why I came to Fox is to help the animation department grow for future students, so that is what I am doing currently.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I've learned to persevere and be flexible, even when it feels like the world is working against you.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
The Bruin, because why not be the mascot?

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Music has always been a major passion of mine, and I knew long before coming to college that I would be pursuing a music degree. It never crossed my mind to major in any other field of study.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?

For years now I've played in several different GFU music ensembles including jazz groups, classical groups, and worship groups. I'm the only music student in several years who has studied the double bass at Fox, so I suppose that makes my role somewhat integral in the ensembles that I've participated in.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

Community is always a priority. Also naps.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?

Andy Tweet. Have you seen that guy on the dance floor??

Jessica Sokoloff

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I have always had a passion for music, and couldn't imagine my life without it. I have also been strongly influenced by music teachers I have had as a child. While spending 5 years in Europe with my church's Youth Exchange Program, I had the opportunity to teach choir and work on arranging, performing, and teaching music for our Song Mission Project. Upon returning to the United States, I decided to go back to school, and my journey lead me to George Fox!

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?

I am the Directors Assistant to the Department Chair, and Director of Choirs, Loren Wenz. I am responsible for organizing our concerts and keeping everything running smoothly when it comes to rehearsals, concerts, and student events. I am the communication between Mr. Wenz and the choir, as well as other directors and faculty. I am also the flute section leader in band, and the alto section leader in choir. As the President of the Collegiate National Associate for Music Educators (GFU chapter), I have helped organized events on campus that promote and educate the importance of music education, as well as being the Collegiate Coordinator for the Oregon Music Educators Association and All-State Conferences. I feel so blessed to have been a part of such a wonderful program, and University.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I have learned to become more involved and social during my time at fox. I was rather uncomfortable coming back to school a little later in life, but I discovered that once I threw myself into the community and looked around for more responsibility, that I found ways to give back that are so fulfilling! I also discovered wonderful lifelong friendships with students and staff that continue long past graduation.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?

That is a difficult question, as I can think of several. I think it would have to be Dr. Sophia Tegart, to teaches flute and music. She so knowledgable in her areas of expertise, and hands-down the best flute teacher I have ever had, and very active in the local music scene. I want to be her when I grow up :)

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Originally I wanted to open a kid's camp, but I soon learned that camping ministry wasn't my full-time calling. Honestly, I just stuck with entrepreneurship and got lucky! Though, I couldn't of picked a major that was more befitting with my personality. I would like to say I have a very holistic life perspective. I have many interests, and I am always looking for ways to incorporate different pieces of my life to make something "better" whether that be an experience or simply to gain understanding... in one sense, that's what entrepreneurship is. Taking different pieces from different activities or items and putting it together with something else to create a richer, more meaningful experience.. and sometimes that looks like a new business.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

Our graduating class is the first class that went through all four years of the Entrepreneurship major. It was a learning experience for everyone. Some students knew what they waned to do, others -like myself- did not. I believe that we all brought a sense of optimism and exploration to the program. We wanted to see what we were capable of, therefore we were not afraid to bend the rules and try new things when it came to our business classes.

Personally, my biggest entrepreneurship experience within the GFU community was facilitating the Commuter RA program within resident life. I was given very little instruction what that was supposed to look like, so I got to play around with ideas and create a program based on my own needs as a commuting student. There were things that worked well, and things that didn't. Overall, it was a rewarding experience that taught me a lot about what it takes to create a program.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

Decide: being indecisive is worse than wrong. Eventually, you have to make a choice, and you might fall on your face for it. Actually, you probably will, and it's probably going to hurt too. Pick yourself up and keep going. Good things come out of failures.

Act: Action is the antidote to despair. You want something, go get it. Work for it. Create it.

Change it. Don't just sit around wishing that things were better. You have an unique set of skills and perspective to offer.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Kelly Uchiumi or Maria Gusenkov are two girls that I admire profoundly! They're the kind of people you want to be around in hopes that you can be a fraction of the person they are. Faculty wise, Deb Sepich, Joel Marshall, and Terry Steele have been the three most influential professors in my time here at fox. All three are extremely selfless, encouraging, and thought provoking. When they talk, you listen.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I grew up playing with Legos and drawing pictures of trains. I originally wanted to be an architect, but only because I knew very little about engineering - I thought they just built bridges. Well, turns out they do a lot more, and I found engineering to be a similar outlet of creativity and design just as Legos and drawing had been.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

Over the summer, I studied the role of density fluctuations in large amplitude Alfvén space waves with Dr. Bob Hamilton, one of the physics professors in the department. I am currently the RA of two houses in HAE and it has been one of the best experiences on campus thus far, both working with an awesome staff and being present in resident's lives.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

Leave your door room more than once or twice freshman year. Talk to strangers, play in the creek, and eat some dirt. Also, call your mom every once in awhile; she probably misses you a lot.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Joey Bareither - he is THE guy.

Where I come from, it is 70 degrees year round and the ocean freezes over at 50.

Christopher Stanfield

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I'm good at math and I've always like putting things together and knowing how they work.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

A lot of the classes have group projects or assignments that require the cooperation of every member of the team. Also bouncing ideas off of each other is often the key that allows us to figure out a tough problems, so it's really an effort on the whole engineering class. I also enjoy helping my roommates out with their homework when I can.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

People are a lot more important than finishing that last homework problem.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

Cameron Adams, because he has already overcome and incredible amount of hardship and struggle to reach the point he has academically and socially. He is very strong in dealing with friends and has great conversation skills. Besides, who wouldn't want to be able to bench 295 lbs?

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I chose to do art because I love it and it has always been apart of my life. My parents have always been supportive and I can not imagine my life without it. Business is interesting to me and I like to know how my money works; plus I love to travel so Global Business seemed like a perfect fit! I hope to combine my knowledge in both art and business one day by working in a museum or some other interesting place.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

In the art community I have helped wherever I could lend a hand. There have been times of setting up food or working with the Lippi award committee. In the overall George Fox community I have been a peer advisor, played sports, and have gone on two summer serve trips with the May Serve Teams for Swaziland, Africa and Nicaragua. I also work in the library so I help a lot of students find the things that they need.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

One life lesson I have learned while being at Fox is that life is too short not to enjoy it. I've learned to be flexible and to take one thing at a time.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

If I could be any other person on GFU campus I guess I would be....Robin Baker maybe haha it would be funny to have so many people talk obsessively about my mustache.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
I wanted to become a English-Chinese interpreter before I came to the States, and I thought studying communication can help me fulfill my dreams. Three years of studying Communication skills did prepare me well with communication skills.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
I had taught Chinese on campus for almost a year, and I believe I helped bridge the gap between different cultures with my language and communication skills.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
One life lesson I've learned while studying here is to ask why before asking what. I used to get stuck by questions like “what should I do” or “what do I do,” and I forget the importance of knowing the reasons and intentions before my choices. I believe asking why before asking what helps me understand life better.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
Martha Iancu. She was my TESOL professor, and I learned many great TESOL and life lessons from her. I decided to study education in my graduate study after taking her courses. She is a patient, diligent, responsible, and loving professor, and she is my role model for my future career.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Words have always been my passion. Writing and reading have been my two loves, and I've learned so much about the world and about myself from those two things. The professors here at George Fox are really top-notch, and have encouraged me in my love for stories and seeing literature from a faith perspective.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I joined the Crescent this year, which has been so much fun. The editors are really encouraging and supportive, and it's been great to learn how to tell people's stories. I've enjoyed meeting some of the guest speakers that come to campus I wouldn't have otherwise had an opportunity to meet, and I love being a part of the Fox student voice.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

I've learned that people are really so kind and encouraging. I've had the opportunity to be a peer advisor this year, and all the people I got to meet were so fun. Living life here at Fox is great because of the community, and I've been able to experience that in a big way.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

My RA, Alli Gilbert. She is so kind and always willing to help anyone who needs it. I really admire her genuine love for people and her love for life!

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Literature is unique in its ability to build both eloquence and compassion. In reading a poem or story we enter another's shoes through heightened or surprising language and images. My major has helped me to enter into the experiences of many people through imagination, and has enabled me to live a deeper life of compassion and to articulate that passion.

- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

I am very grateful for the relationships I was able to engage in while I was at Fox-becoming close friends with people with many different experiences than me transformed my view of other people, empowering me to speak, with love, against injustice and dehumanization.

- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

Don't be afraid. Abigail Rine once told me that sometimes the things we fear writing are the things we need to write the most. That came true for me, and it transformed my relation to fear, admonishing me to seek the good my fears teach me.

- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

I would be Don Sprague, hands down-then I could throw incredible pots and not work on Fridays.

▪ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

One of my greatest fears is public speaking. It terrifies me and gives me so much anxiety that I actually shake like a leaf in a tornado (ok, maybe not that extreme). There's something about the adrenaline rush that makes you learn as much as you possibly can so you don't come out looking like an idiot. I went into communication because I wanted to overcome that fear. What I found was that the push to learn more and the adrenaline makes it an exhilarating experience that I love. So even though I went in to challenge my fear, I came out with a lot more knowledge than I had ever expected and a basis for understanding the most simple and complex phenomenon that we perform: communication.

▪ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?

The most impact I had was within small groups of people, either groups of friends or even small groups for projects. But that fits my personality as I enjoy being behind the curtains, motivating others to be the face of the play while I adjust the lighting and sound system. I take passion in things like that; being able to give motivation and help others. Of course I tried to help out within the community and the communication department when I could, like being involved in award nights and Christmas parties. But what really made my heart sing was doing subtle things that no one would notice to make their lives better or easier, or maybe just happier. I truly believe acts of random kindness (and to make it easy to remember: ARK) can make all the difference in a community.

▪ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

No matter who you are or what you are going through, God will give you the support you need. I can't remember how many times I have been stressed out beyond my limits, not knowing how I was going to handle whatever crisis (or really hard assignment) I was dealing with. But every single time, God sent me someone with some form of encouragement. There are so many good people at Fox, whether it be faculty or students, who truly do care about you and your well being. It is such a blessing to be in a place where you can go through the hardest trial and know that someone will be there for you, no matter what. It showed me how powerful God is and how much He really does love us. If He didn't, He wouldn't give you the ability to see the sunrise after the darkness.

▪ If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?

The first name that pops in my head is my good friend Haley Winkelman, without whom I am not sure I would be here today. She is the first person who taught me that no matter what you are going through, God will give you the love and support you need. Then the great Onjalai Flake comes to mind, as she inspired me to be passionate in everything I do. As for faculty, Kevin Jones taught me that whatever life throws at you, God is bigger. You can overcome if you persevere. These three life lessons are what keep me going and what keep me sane in this life of trials and hardship. These individuals have changed my life and I look up to them more than they will ever know.

■ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

Ever since I was little I have loved to create things. Throughout high school I really enjoyed doing things such as yearbook and designing other print materials. When the opportunity to go to Fox with an art scholarship came up, I decided to go for it!

■ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?

This year I had the great opportunity to use my skills as a designer and serve the Fox community as the graphic designer for Spiritual Life.

■ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

While being at Fox I have come to see the value of deep relationships with friends and family.

■ If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?

I would love to be a student who has a ton of free time so that I could sleep more.

■ Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?

I love having the ability to be creative. To me, I have found majors that I am able to thoroughly enjoy and continue to pursue without getting burnt out. Plus, while being artistic I have the ability to listen to music non-stop. What could be better!?

■ What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major / department as well as the GFU community?

I created the stalker-book a few years ago! But more seriously, I like having the ability to engage with other students in my classes and helping them reach their full potential.

■ What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?

There are times to be serious, and times to be ridiculous. And sometimes time for both at the same time.

■ If you could be any other GFU student / faculty, who would you be and why?

It may seem like a cop-out, but I honestly wouldn't choose to be anyone else. I'm perfectly happy being the man God continues to use.

I decided to major in management because I wanted to do business and it seemed like the best fit!
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
Sometimes I make sassy comments in class and try to contribute, but most of the time I am a listener to bounce ideas off of.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
I have learned that planning ahead and being prepared is an integral part of being successful. I would not have succeeded at Fox without the help of my advisor, Annette Nemetz.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
I would totally be Kelly Uchiumi! She is such an approachable and humble person, and she always brings sunshine into any room.

- Why did you decide to major in your specific discipline?
At first I wanted to pursue a biology degree but then I knew it was not for me. I looked into some of the business majors and fell in love with business management. I love management because I feel I am called to lead not only in the business world but being a leader as Christ was. I enjoy working with people and managing them as well. I love making things work more efficient and better finding solutions to problem solve.
- What are some ways you have played an integral role within your major/department as well as the GFU community?
Business management has not only helped me in the business world, but also in the community as well. The major helped me able to manage my time more efficient and being a leader here on campus. I am the leader for FCA (Fellowship Christian Athletes) here on campus. I feel God led me to this position to reach out to athletes. I am also the President of S-AAC (Student Athletic Advisor Committee). This is where athletes are given a voice for the NCAA decisions in rules that pass through. The last thing is I am the captain of the baseball team. It is awesome to integrate the skills I learn in the classroom to real events.
- What is one life lesson you've learned while here at Fox?
Before I came to George Fox University, I was not a Christian/follower of Christ. I lived my life my own way. Fox has changed me from the inside out in the last 4 years. I have committed my life to Christ 2 years ago and I am so blessed to be part of this school. I have met some lifelong friends here and I am blessed to be part of an awesome, spiritually led University.
- If you could be any other GFU student/faculty, who would you be and why?
I would be Jamie Johnson because he is an awesome teacher and a spiritually gifted individual.

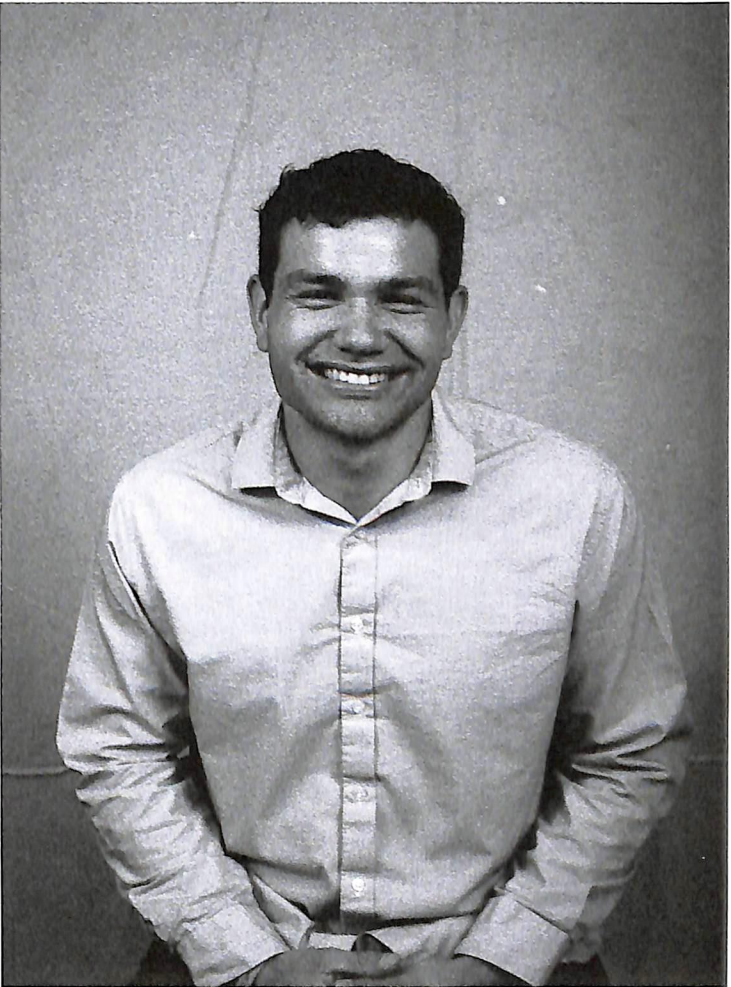

I am very blessed to be part of a super great university and I am happy that I chose Fox. If I could go back in time, I would do it all over again.

The Empty Bowls Banquet fundraiser was a culmination of all the hard work and time given to throwing, glazing and firing thousands of ceramic bowls. Time was given by students, faculty and strangers who wanted to join the cause. Thousands of work hours later, the banquet was ready to commence. Both those in the know and passersby alike joined in the grandeur of the evening, stopping to look at and purchase the stockpile of bowls that filled all the available tables in the Bruins Den. The event itself involved a buffet style meal and art auction that went on through the entirety of the evening. Approximately $19,000 was raised at the Empty Bowls fundraiser Friday night to assist art professor Doug Campbell as he continues to recover from a stroke. On top of that, an anonymous donor had pledged to match donations up to $15,000, bringing the grand total to $34,000! The event proved to be a tremendous success far exceeding any expectations the Department and community had for that night. Whether all involved knew Doug personally or not, the university and community were able to rally around a cause much greater than themselves and show their support to a friend and colleague in need.

noun. a game in which clubs with wooden or metal heads are used to hit a small, white ball into a number of holes, usually 9 or 18, in succession, situated at various distances over a course having natural or artificial obstacles, the object being to get the ball into each hole in as few strokes as possible.

LACROSSE

Two-thousand fourteen marked an exciting year for George Fox University's Division III athletics program. The women's lacrosse team played its first spring season this year and became the 16th intercollegiate sport offered at the school with Natalie Harrington as the new head coach. Harrington's vision for coaching is based on the "East Coast style," an aggressive and physical sort of play. In Harrington's eyes, there's no sense in tying bows in the girls' hair. Although many expected the team to face initial recruiting troubles, an incredible interest in the new program developed quickly and a huge variety of experienced and talented women were eager to participate. The University is thankful that Harrington, a passionate, energetic, and authentic example of Christ, has stepped into the role of the first coach. Year-round, the women have committed themselves to becoming a team that George Fox is proud of. By mid-season, the team had several remarkable wins and with this fantastic first year as the foundation, the new lacrosse program is bound for remarkable success.

TOWNSCAPES III

RED HILLS MARKET

155 SW 7th St.
Dundee, OR 97115

On a beautiful spring day in March, 2012, Red Hills Market officially opened for business, providing food and wine to the Newberg-Dundee area. Jody and Michelle Kropf are the founders of the operation. Jody brings memories of working at his family's restaurant, the Brownsville General Store, from the time he was a child. After they moved to Dundee in 2002, both Jody and Michelle began dreaming of a space that locals could call their home and that visitors could explore and enjoy:

"We love all the local bounty of Yamhill County and wanted to create a restaurant/market that showcased it." With the help of their silent family friend partners Gary and Marcia Rohweder, the couple was able to create just the place for the residents of Yamhill County. Their continual goal for Red Hills Market is to provide good local food in an environment that is welcoming to all.

BONAVENTURA

Authentic Italian Sausage and Deli

620 E. 1st Street
Newberg, OR 97132

Brothers Joe and Randy Bonaventura always had a passion for family and good food. Raised in upstate New York, they made sausage and wine with their parents from the time they were young children. It wasn't until they found themselves in Newberg, Oregon for over fifteen years that their desire to create a restaurant was born. "It was funny, it was a hot August night, we were eating, we had just made ten pounds of sausage with our little kitchen aide mixer and we were sitting outside and barbequing it ... and we looked at each other and said, 'What are we doing?'" The following Monday they signed a lease on a building and got to work, seeing their vision grow within the space on 1st street. Only 90 days later after that night, Newberg saw the grand opening of Bonaventura on November 14, 2012.

As a George Fox contribution to the restaurant, the student union created sandwiches to be featured and voted on the best creation. The Bruin Bruschetta was the result of that event, and is still one of the most popular sandwiches to date.

As a thank you, Bonaventura donated over $500 to a scholarship. They also provide internships for marketing students and employ several George Fox students.

Throughout their entire lives, Joe and Randy understood the importance and beauty of family. Their desire for Bonaventura is that it is a welcoming environment for everyone who enters. "Our mission statement is to be true to everyone as if they were your family. I mean, that's how we were born and raised." For the two families behind Bonaventura, it's not about making money, but having fun and treating people right.

Bonaventura would like to include a special thank you to the George Fox administration for their continued support.

PASTORCILLOS

Taco Truck

105 S. Main Street
Newberg, OR 97132

The food truck craze has seen rapid expanse over the past five years, especially in the culturally pioneering region of the west coast. This past year has the food truck experience has arrive in our own neighborhood of Old Town Newberg. On the far end of our humble town, just before the 99W begins to extend to our neighboring countryside of Dundee, lies a street corner near Nap's Thriftway where Pastorcillos has chosen to set up shop. From the signage advertising the truck's selections, to the enticing aromas experienced upon approach, Pastorcillos has seemingly established an effortless brand identity of authenticity and friendship. As any connoisseur of street food would expect, the recipes are simple, authentic, but effective. Tacos are available in every variation one could desire when it comes to meat choice, from simple Carne and Pollo asada, to more exotic selections like Lengua and Cabeza. Accompanying these are classic drink choices such as Mexican Coke and Jarritos. Victoria, the owner and head cook, shared the background of the business: The truck itself was purchased three years ago, and the business soon separated from partnership with a local Taqueria. Business from the community has been encouraging, and Victoria loves working the truck. Regardless of payment methods or distance from campus, the encouraging truth remains that Victoria and her staff find their joy in serving quality food to their customers.

JAC'S

Deli and Frozen Custard

111 E. 1st Street
Newberg, OR 97132

Jessica, Josi, Alli, and Colton: the four children of Joe and Betsy Fettig inspired the name behind Jac's Deli and Frozen Custard. Amidst a season of change, Jac's came to be from Joe and Betsy exploring a new vocation that combined their love for good food and the Newberg-Dundee area. Towards the end of 2011 they began searching for different ideas to create a small, family-owned business, and by February 2013 they began working on the first stages for the deli. The location was nailed down, the remodeling was underway, and the menu was being perfected. "Then, in early April, our son—Colton—was called to Heaven. He had planned on working at Jac's after graduating from OSU and use the experience at the deli as a step towards owning his own pub some day," says Betsy Fettig.

"It may seem strange that we jumped back into the work of Jac's right after Colton's death, but that is what we did. What we needed to do." Finally, thanks to family and friends, Jac's opened late August 2012, welcoming sunshine and customers hungry for handmade burgers and old-fashioned frozen custard. Their ultimate desire is to remain a solid part of the Newberg community as well as to provide a short pleasant break for those passing through. "We aim to serve our customers with good and healthy food as well as with a pleasant attitude during every visit," says Betsy. Their ultimate desire is to remain a solid part of the Newberg community as well as a short pleasant break for those passing through.

MUCHAS GRACIAS

Mexican Food

1915 Portland Rd.
Newberg, OR 97132

Muchas Gracias is a staple to the Fox community. For east side residents, it provides a close-proximity hub of tasty cultural food, and for all other students, it still provides nifty discounts at most any hour (i.e. free drinks when you show your student ID). While it is frequently viewed as a fast food chain, its employees and customers would argue otherwise. Muchas is one of the only 24-hour sit down dining spots in Newberg, and while it offers an array of larger dishes, it also has options as inexpensive as $1.50.

In order to shoot the above photos, two of us from the creative team made the trek across town. After snapping a few exteriors, we thought we might grab a quick midnight bite. It turned out they were closed due to cleaning. However, when these three hospitable employees realized we were hungry, they legitimately reopened shop at 2am to make us burritos. And not only that, they did it completely willingly and with smiles on their faces. Essentially, they completely lived up to their name.

I have always loved to travel. As an artist, nothing could better engage my senses than the exciting new sounds, smells, and tastes of another country. Even more than that, traveling is a chance for me as a student to bring my education to full fruition. This semester I am studying in Germany where I get to engage daily in history in a uniquely personal way. I walked the streets where people once rallied, I ate in cafés where poets gathered, I saw the landscape which inspired countless artists. There is such a wealth of experience surrounding me that I can hardly take it all in. Travel can serve multiple purposes. Certainly, as our society becomes more globally interconnected it is increasingly important to be aware of the world around you, to be culturally sensitive, and to open yourself up to the rich diversity of experiences available to you. There are three study weeks that are a part of this program, designed to allow students a chance to visit countries of their choosing. These have been significant to me because they have provided an opportunity to engage with people on a different level. When I travel I either stay in hostels or couchsurf and I do that intentionally. Both of these methods force me out of my comfort zone and place me in a setting where I am interacting with people from all over the world instead of just my American friends. Ultimately, living abroad has been just as much about people as it has been about place. I will of course remember roadtripping through the Swiss Alps at sunset, or hiking through the Black Forest, or walking through the Alhambra in Spain.

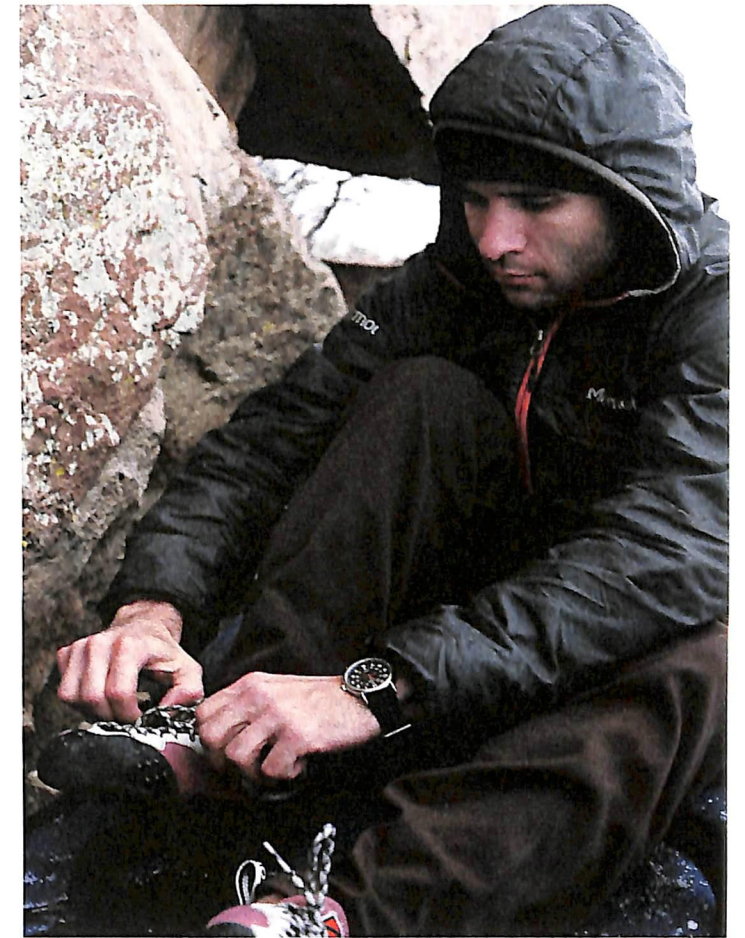

But I have been changed even more by the conversations. The German man who talked about growing up in East Berlin. The Korean women who told me the story of her mother's death and her long road through grief and healing. The man from Switzerland who eagerly shared his passion for music and culture. The woman in Luxembourg who took me to a film festival where we engaged on issues of migration and poverty. If anything, this journey has reminded me that despite the chasm of cultural differences there is a deeper shared humanity within us. I am constantly in awe of the way pure strangers can connect. These are the memories that have made my study the most rewarding. Though I am still attempting to find the words to explain what I have seen and felt, I know this trip has already changed me considerably. When you are taken out of your familiar routine you begin to notice your thoughts and behaviors through contrast; the unfamiliar background casts a new light that sharpens the way you see. I have been challenged more than I thought possible; I have felt ignorant and awkward and lonely. But I have lived through that and gained a sense of confidence in myself that I do not think would have been possible otherwise. I can truthfully say that these past few months have changed me completely and I can only hope that as I return home I hold onto this person I am becoming.

Climbing at George Fox is a quickly growing passion for many students. The climbers are a tight knit group with great love for their own, but are also incredibly welcoming to anyone, those with a desire to climb or not. They are connective and driven, openhearted with a desire to become stronger. For sophomore Conner Runia, many of his first interactions with the culture of campus were through these specific people. The climbing wall is located in a small closet in the Wheeler Sports Complex, a sanctuary away from schoolwork and the qualms that surround one's life. Everything seems to disappear when focused on reaching the top of the wall, by processing where the best footing is and how to lift oneself higher. It is a different challenge when facing the mountainside together, though Runia reflects upon confronting those challenges with his colleagues: "Some of these people are my best friends—tighter than anyone I knew in high school." Through climbing, his relationships with people are closer, for it is one of the connective tissues that link them together. Aside from open hours, there are climbing classes available for students, as well as group trips to various locations. "They are great, and very inexpensive financially," Runia says as he reflects upon his trips to Central Oregon and California. These treks include climbing routes and exploring the beauty of the Pacific Northwest and the greater West Coast. Above all, it is an activity that brings people together and creates a unique community of people dedicated to each other and their love of the sport.

CLUBS III

William Penn Honors Program

Scholarship is, in essence, knowledge acquired by deep study. As a liberal arts institution, that particular idea is something we cling to dearly. Part of this also picks up on what some would say is best about Quaker evangelical christianity - the idea of 'query' - of asking the right questions as a means of pushing closer to truth.

But some would ask, which wells of thought do we draw from in order to accomplish this great task?

After World War II, many scholars began to question the purpose of the university, and from this discourse was born the great books colleges. They felt that education should be about reading great texts and acquainting oneself with the best of what has been thought and said from history. However, let's be practical here - it's hard enough to find a job with an English or Art major, let alone a degree in great books. Thus, when our dear university decided to integrate this academic style, the William Penn Honors Program was born - which is, essentially, an alternative general education package. This means that the students who take part will still have a normal major within the university and be fully integrated into the campus community, but have slightly different course curriculum.

The idea is that, by the end of the program, students will have read through about 150 of the most important works from civilization, ranging from ancient Greece and Israel, back into modernity. Students then finish their senior year with a 20th century seminar as well as developing their honors senior thesis.

While students have to be accepted into the Honors program based off of criteria such as SAT scores and GPA, they also look deeply into the students aptitude and passion for diving into great texts, patient discussion, and writing essays. However, it's plain that the motives of those at the helm of this endeavor are there primarily to guide students into deeper thought, and even more importantly, help them become a sensitive person who can actually respond to what these great authors are saying.

Unfortunately, no.. for those of us who are already students here, we're too late to join. However, this idea still bears weight with how we interact with pieces of literature. The honors faculty encourage students to enter into the actual words of the text, and that once you're there - ask the author a good question. Ask the text a good question. Become a sensitive person who humbles themselves before renown thought.

It's like a kind of spiritual exercise - like falling in love. For instance, you know you're more in love the more you're recognizing who the person is, and what they actually are when you're not projecting onto them and making them who you want them to be. Treat the text similarly.

The hope for the William Penn Honors Program is far reaching, yet also holds the possibility of direct impact on our own soil. The Honors Program thinks that the art of interpretation is the art of understanding. It takes a lot of patience, a lot of intellectual humility, and careful and patient discussion with others. They want students to be individuals, humans beings, and fully formed Christians. They want to see a progression of the way in which students faith interacts with the ideas that they're engaging with in class and then to take the conversation outside the walls of the classroom.

So, in total, it's safe to say that the inclusion of this new method of education is bound to further George Fox in rigorous scholarship. It should be considered a grand opportunity to pursue excellence and understanding as a community, as well as individuals.

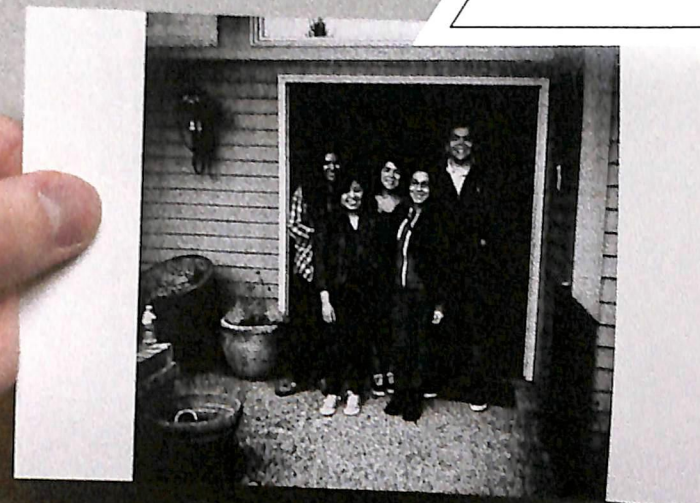

I.J.M.

The International Justice Mission raises awareness about sex-trafficking in the Portland area and internationally. Through campus events, the club seeks to raise awareness and change the mentality of students and faculty about sex trafficking. The International Justice Mission enriches students' experiences at Fox and gives them purpose. It provides opportunities for students to connect with others who are passionate about fighting injustice. Being a part of this group helps students grow spiritually and gain fresh perspectives about prayer. The club hosts various events throughout the year such as the Stand for Freedom and Chains Shall We Break events to advocate for victims of injustice. The International Justice Mission is a dynamic club that is open to everyone.

Latino Heritage Club

Latino Heritage Club (LHC) is a club that promotes Latin culture awareness, appreciation, and leadership with students of Latino and non-Latino backgrounds. In a broader sense, we seek to build community, speak on diverse issues, and put on events that bring George Fox students together. Throughout this year we have collaborated with different departments, and believe we have made the Latino student voice known on campus. Our most notable events have been the spoken word poetry nights, where students from different backgrounds speak what is on their hearts. For the LHC and other George Fox students, this has allowed for students to experience community in a raw, empowering and unique way. In other events and club meetings, such as Salsa classes, Fogatas, and Zumba, we have created an environment where laughter and joy are the highlights of the night. I therefore reiterate that our club is centered on building an authentic and strong community, where the Latin heritage is explored and appreciated.

Sigma Zeta

Sigma Zeta is the Beta Beta chapter of the Sigma Zeta National Science and Mathematics Honors Society. Qualifying members are eligible to present research at the annual National Sigma Zeta Convention in the spring. The club desires to integrate science with faith, and strives to facilitate community among the science majors, creating a space where students can get to know their peers and professors on a personal level. They seek opportunities to serve the science departments and the greater community, including assisting in hosting the popular Dalton Lectures presented by prominent Christian scientists.

The members of the club embrace their own inherent diversity, and recognize the constant opportunities to maximize their own potential in social and academic contexts. Members cite Sigma Zeta as a fantastic place to get to know professors and peers in a meaningful way, and hold dear the belief that relationships shouldn't only be cultivated inside the classroom. By connecting with each other both in and out of a school setting, Sigma Zeta builds a network of encouragement and support for students in the sciences.

Ski Club

The Ski Club is an organization that strives to connect people with the joy of the outdoors through the art of shredding snow. On the mountain, club members gain a greater sense of worth and freedom. The club creates an avenue for skiing and snowboarding enthusiasts to make new friends and explore Mt Hood in financially practical ways. Through the Ski Club, students improve as skiers and snowboarders, collaborate with other groups, and gain experience organizing events. The Ski Club's trips to the mountain create lasting memories that help bridge gaps with international students as well. It's open to everyone regardless of skill level.

Psychology Club

The psychology club builds community by bringing together psychology majors and reaching out to professors. Psychology students are able to network with one another in the club. Each year, the club hosts fun events such as an ugly sweater party, bowling nights, and a cookie decorating party to creating lasting memories. By opening up events to faculty, the psychology club allows students to get to know professors early on and create beneficial connections for the future.

Black Student Union and Alliance

The Black Student Union focuses on seeing differences as a way to bridge racial barriers. The club brings awareness to multicultural issues across campus by emphasizing the beauty of diversity. It connects students of different ethnicities and teaches students to appreciate who they are as individuals in fun ways. The club helps students heal from the scars of discrimination and welcomes everyone.

FACULTY III

When I began teaching at George Fox, it was still a college, and Ed Stevens was the president. During my years here, I watched GFC become a university, build LeShana dorm, purchase and renovate the Villa Center, begin Serve Day, reinstate a football program, win national championships in baseball and women's basketball, build a new stadium, and start the William Penn Honors Program. I originally came to teach in the communication department and coach the speech and debate team. Over the years, I've taught and advised hundreds of students who are now making a difference in their communities and their world. I've loved being in an academic setting where I can freely talk about Jesus and invite students to explore ways that Christians might think and act ethically in a rapidly changing culture. A major highlight of my career has been my involvement in Juniors Abroad—beginning in 1997 with my first trip to the British Isles and France. Other trips included Spain, Norway, Denmark, Iceland, the Netherlands, and Belgium in Europe, plus Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Panama in Central America and China in Asia. Overall, I am thankful to George Fox for being a place where I could do the things I love to do – teach, advise, mentor, travel, and serve.

Just before crossing through the doorway of Minthorn, she turned at said matter of factly - "I tell my students: It's like you're taking an exam, and you're at the essay portion – except you're authoring the essay with the manner in which you live your life; and the question is, do you really believe what you say you believe about God?"

SUE O'DONNELL

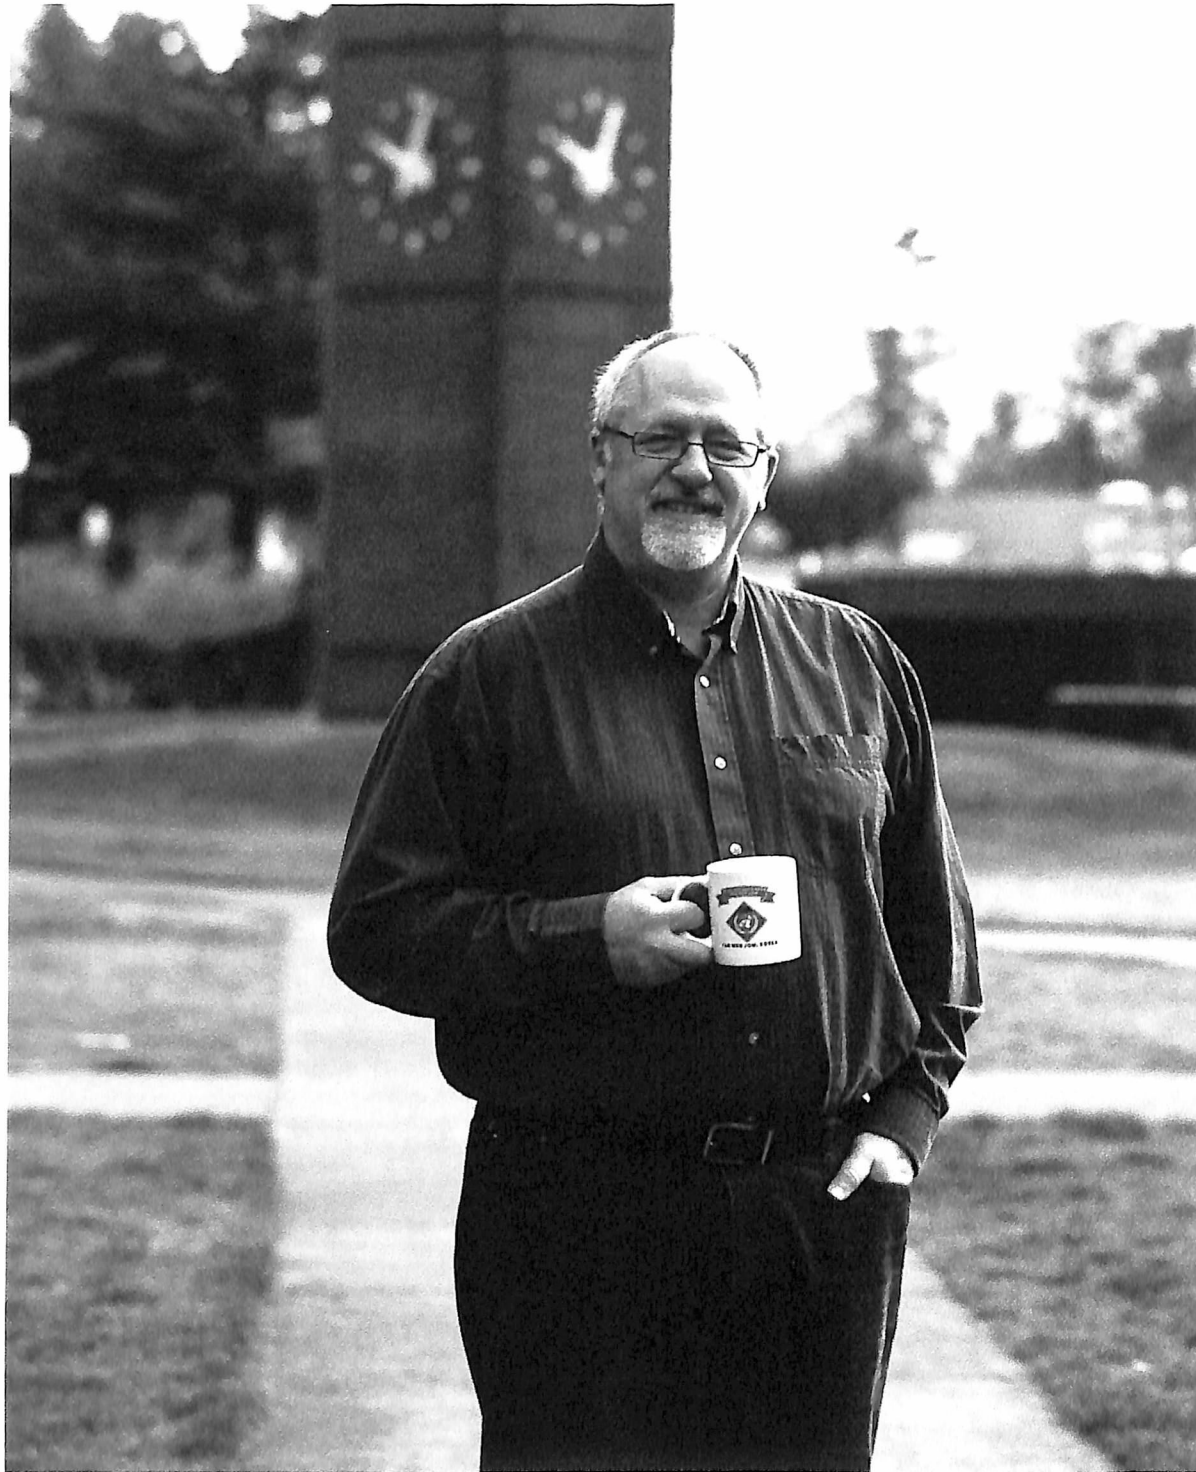

Associate Professor of Psychology

I have been at Fox since fall of 2001. I was drawn here by the atmosphere and the Christian commitment. I liked that idea that I would be able to be authentic in my faith and my interactions with others, and that I would be able to work with others who have similar world views. I also appreciated that Fox is a rigorous academic institution and believers can honor God while striving to be His voice to the world. In the time I've been here, that promise has been fulfilled over and over – God is good. My most memorable student interactions occur every time a student “gets it”, every time we see the kingdom more clearly. When students share deeply of themselves, when authentic interactions occur, then we are learning about the creation and by knowing the creation, we will know the Creator. If I had any words of advice, I would encourage students to stretch themselves during their college years, to try new things and live deeply. Too much focus is on success and failure, but this is a time for growth and learning. Take a chance, do something you've never tried before! Get to know people who are different from you, take a class in an area outside your major, try a new food, learn to knit. Whatever – just open yourself to the opportunities before you.

By far the best professor I've had here. She is so dedicated to not only helping her students success but genuinely learn in her classes. She even hosts students weekly to watch Survivor, fostering a sense of community outside classes. Sue is a fantastic professor, and she really knows her stuff. She cares so much about each individual student and that really shows. I've honestly learned more in her classes than in any other class I've taken. Sue is a fantastic professor, and she really knows her stuff. She cares so much about each individual student and that really shows.

BRENT WILSON

Associate Professor of Computer Science

I have taught here at GFU for 20 years now. The time has flown by. You become truly blessed when you love your job and look forward to everyday. I can honestly say that has been the case here for me... well, maybe except for the week before spring break. That one tends to drag on forever! One of the most memorable moments for me was having one of my classes work on a software system for an adoption agency...

in the end, they had a hand in placing more abandoned children into loving homes. That is awesome. My advice for incoming freshman is quite simple... learn, laugh, & love. This is an amazing place. You will not only receive a great education but you will make life long friends... enjoy every day.

No regrets!

Brent is an excellent, dedicated professor. He dedicates so much time to his students, and you can clearly see that he cares about them. Even when he and his family were dealing with some challenging health circumstances, he still made sure to take the time to make up a video lesson so that his students could still learn even though he wasn't able to physically be in the classroom. Whenever I talk with him, he is encouraging and kind and shows that he genuinely cares about me as a student and a person.

TIFFANY CALDWELL

Clinical Faculty

Tiffany has worked at George Fox on an adjunct basis the past four years and, since 2001, has worked as a staff nurse in the neonatal intensive care unit at Providence St. Vincent Medical Center in Portland. She also taught nursing at Clackamas Community College in 2009. As an RN, Tiffany specializes in acute patient care, staff development and family advocacy.

Tiffany works tirelessly with the nursing students from sophomore to senior year. Much of our growth as nurses can be contributed to her guidance. She truly cares about each of us and has a heart for service. Tiffany is a wonderful and very important part of our nursing program, and the education each student receives during their time at Fox. She makes it a priority to know each student individually, and is genuinely concerned about all of us. I could go on and on about Tiffany's merits, but will suffice it to say, she truly reflects the Christ-centered commitment of the University and shines His light into the lives of all she meets.

For those of you who took part in youth group during middle school and high school, I'm sure you recall the quite unnecessary and frequently humiliating games that would take place. Sure, shared memories build community, but is a baby food or Spam eating competition really necessary in fulfilling that?

Well, I'm sure you're all relieved that you've passed that stage of adolescence and moved onto the more refined things in life (i.e. college).

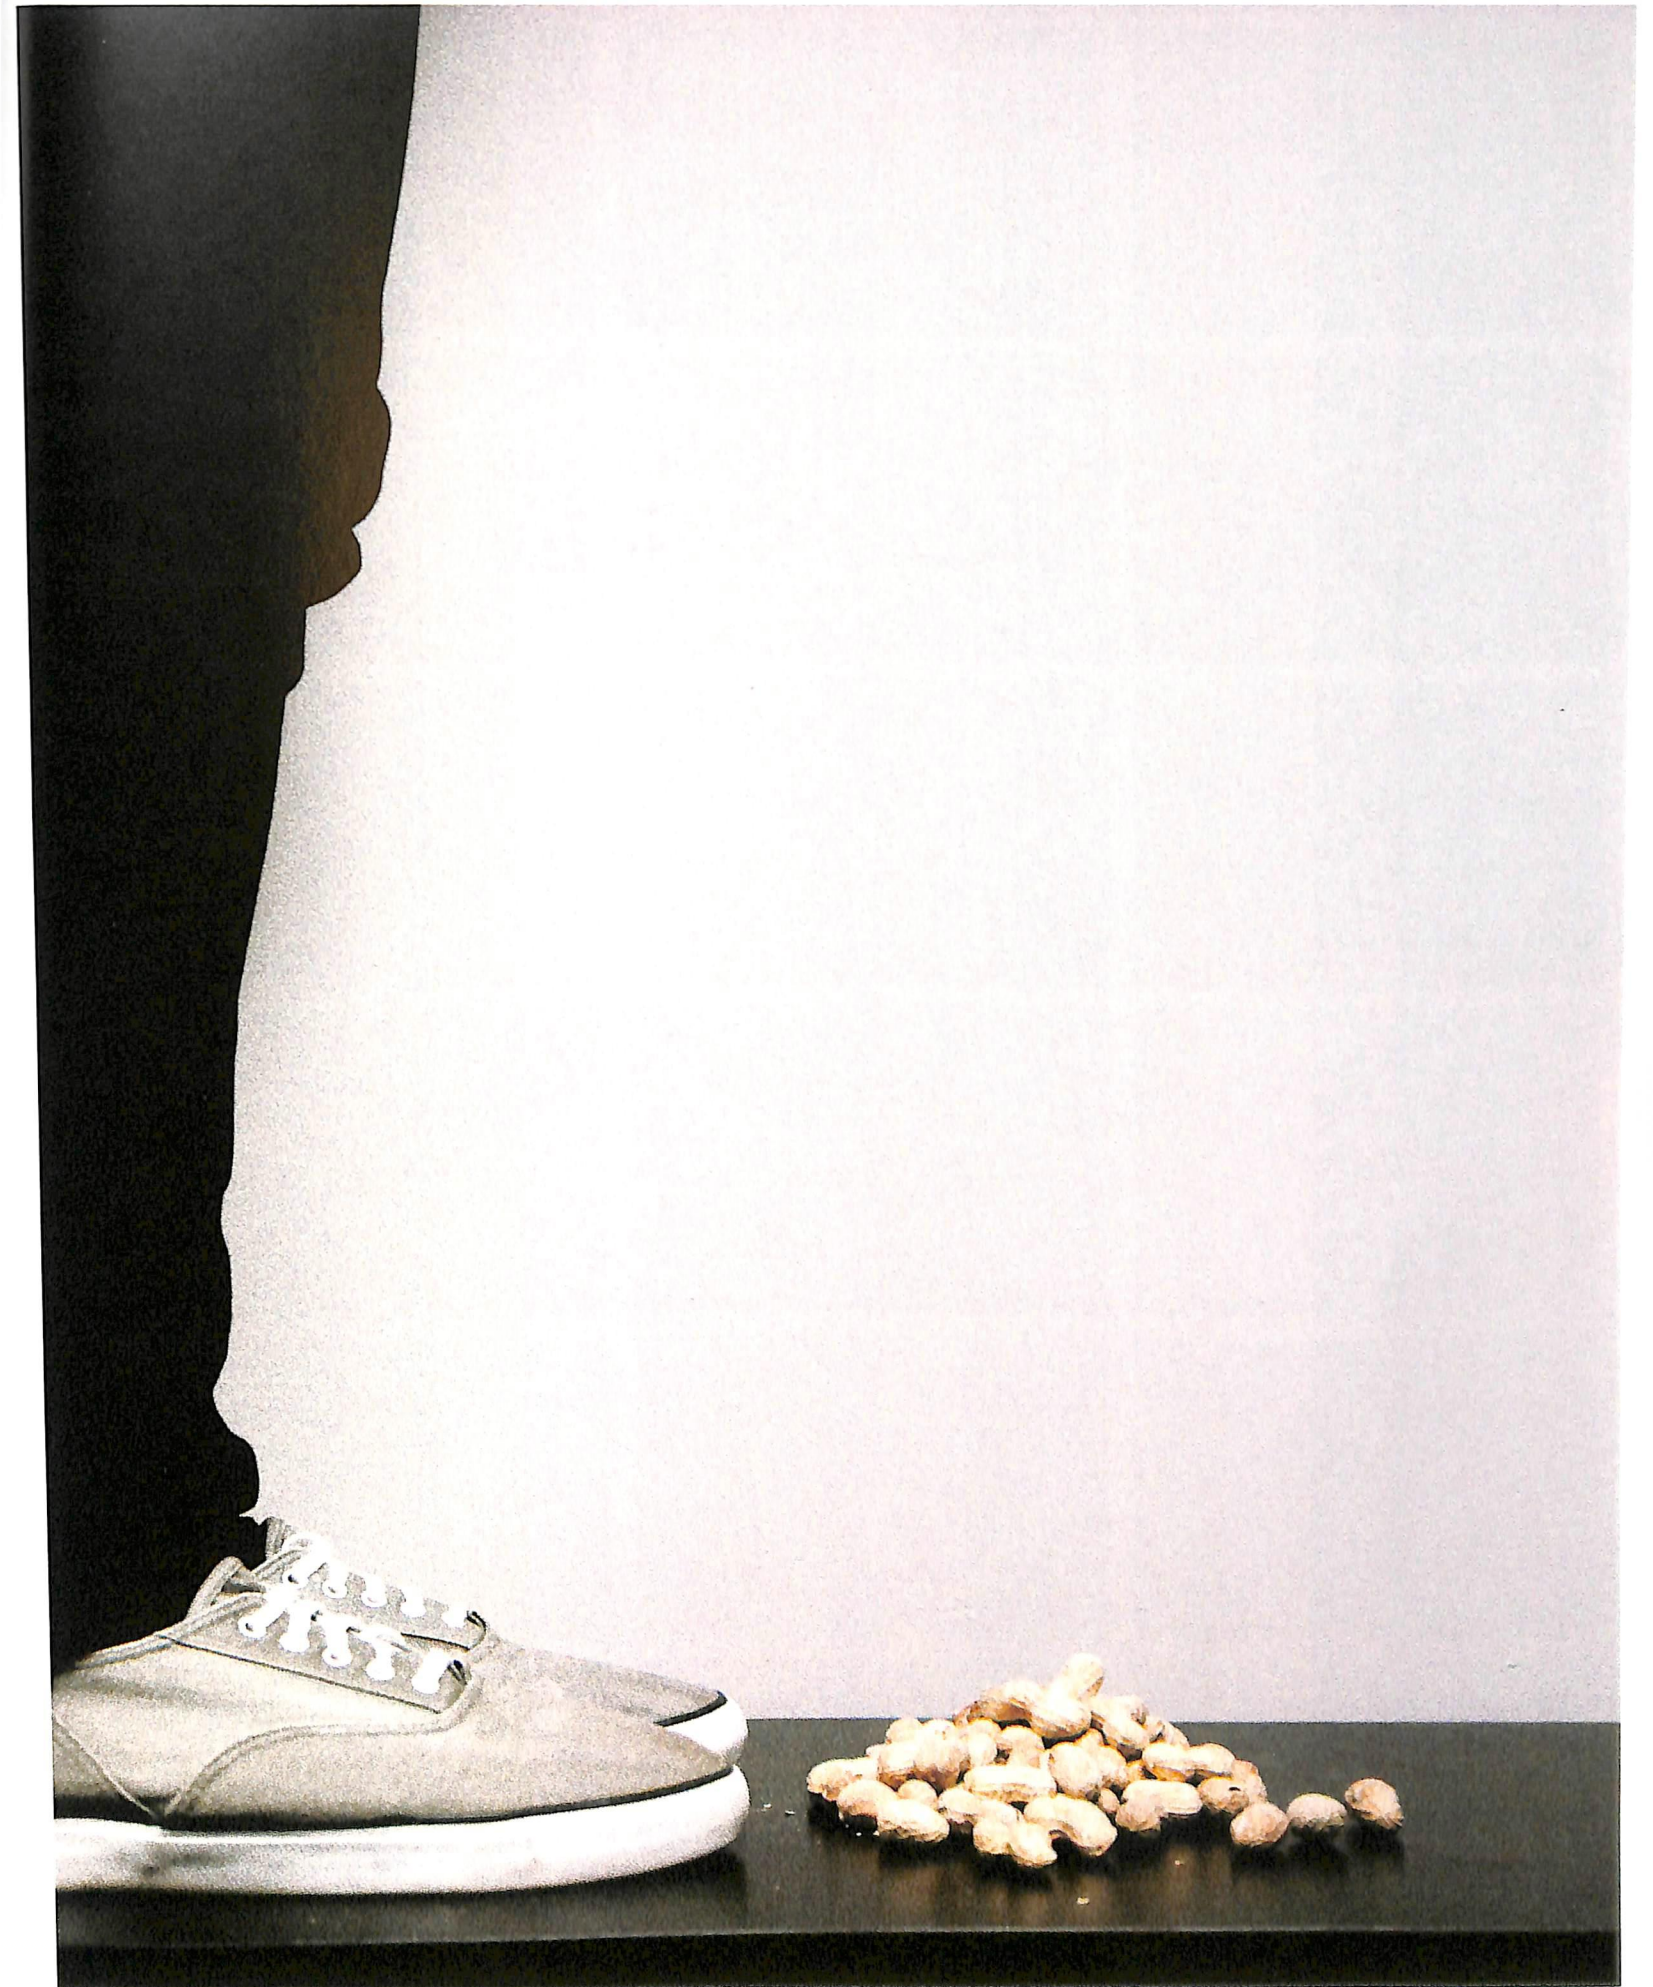

PSYCH.

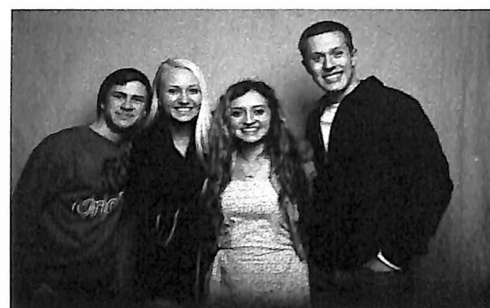

Again, the 70's and 80's - they were weird - and one of the weird things was how socially acceptable it was to humiliate the freshman class.

It turns out that as a means of hazing, upperclassmen would have freshman push peanuts across the floor with their noses in a race format.

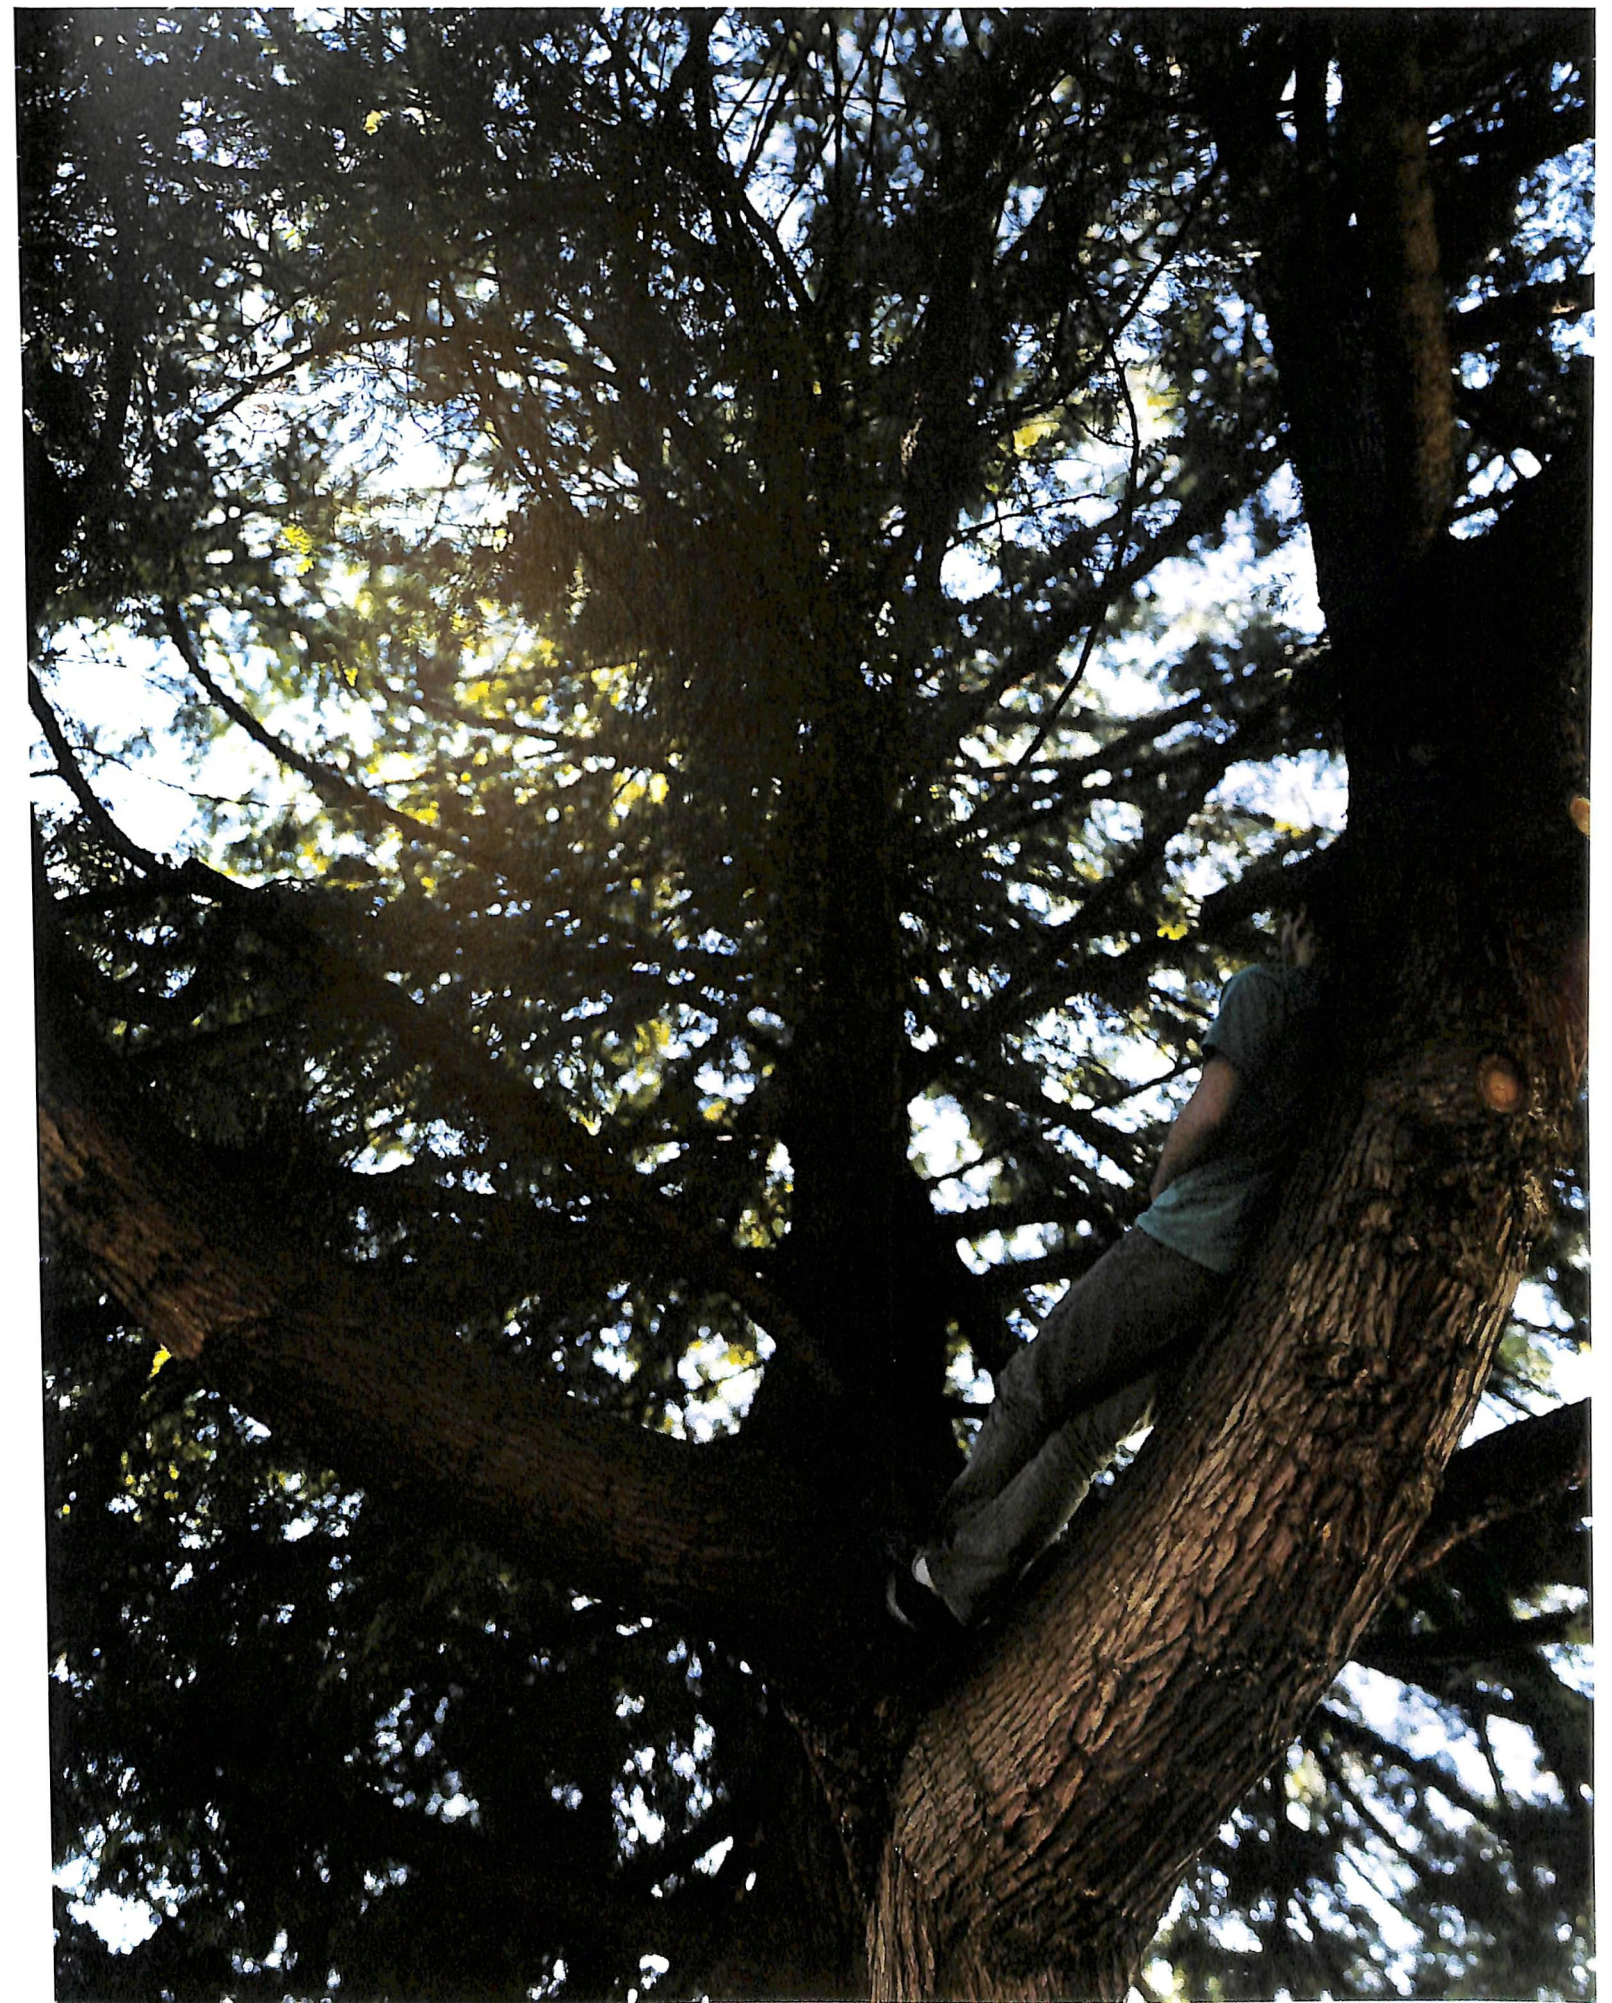

I guess the only thing we can hope for in such a situation is that 1) you have a secure sense of self, and 2) you're not allergic to nuts.

As far as takeaways go - in a weird and roundabout sort of way - it's cool that the upperclassmen of the past were so involved with the incoming students. Given, we probably shouldn't bring back this tradition (I don't want to see rug-burn on anyone's nose), but maybe we should allow it to serve as a reminder to us: camaraderie comes in all shapes and sizes.

ALUMNI ATTESTATION

Greg Lutze - Visual Supply Co.

▪ What role did George Fox play in your personal and vocational development?

George Fox played a significant role in who I am as a person, particularly as it relates to learning what I did and didn't believe. When I look back at my time at Fox, I see a person with lots of insecurities trying to figure out where I fit in as a Christian and a creative person. Even years later it is a constant struggle, but conversations with friends and lectures from professors at Fox helped shape my perspective and point me in the right direction.

▪ What's one Fox memory you have?

The time spent with my close friends skateboarding, playing music and just hanging out. Everyone says you will move on after graduation and never talk to your college friends, but that has not been true in my life.

▪ Any advice for the students?

Understand how much you don't know and accept that with humility.

You can be a pacifist but you will still have to fight for almost everything you believe in.

Pay off your loans as quickly as possible.

Grades don't really matter as much as you think.

Overnight success doesn't happen overnight.

Take as many afternoon naps as you can, because you won't get to after graduation. Unless, of course, you are unemployed.

Think and dream beyond - beyond campus, beyond Newberg, beyond Portland, beyond Oregon.

Life after college isn't better or worse. Just different. And maybe a bit bigger.

▪ Most valued piece of wisdom you've acquired?

"I've never had a dream in my life, because a dream is what you want to do but still haven't pursued. I knew what I wanted and did it until it was done, so I lived the dream I wanted to be since day one."

We are glad you are holding this book in your hand. As you flipped through it, we hope you have felt some connection to this place. The place made up of beautiful souls. The place where knowledge is graciously given. The place where creativity is alive. Our hope is that The Student Collective will live beyond these pages and will serve as a tangible reminder of where you have been and what is yet to come. Onward.

Passing Through: A Lesson in Leaving

WORDS BY ANONYMOUS GFU STUDENT

For all intents and purposes, this is as much a welcome as it is a goodbye to George Fox. It's not the same one you give upon touring the campus halls, or at any of the designated 'welcome' events, but rather it's the kind of welcome one gives in retrospect to any four adjacent walls one has the brief opportunity of calling their home. But George Fox can no more be called a home then veins are to blood, for as blood cells, we pass through the vein with all of the assurance and inevitability of those to come without the faintest idea of where we're going. And that's the beauty of it.
