CONTRIBUTORS

GAYLE BEEBE serves as president of Spring Arbor University in Spring Arbor, MI. Prior to taking this position he was dean of the Haggard School of Theology and director of the Friends Center at Azusa Pacific University. He is a recorded minister in Northwest Yearly Meeting, and he has served as a pastor within Northwest and Southwest yearly meetings. He is author of the book The Interpretive Role of the Religious Community in Friedrich Schleiermacher and Josiah Royce: Heavenly Bonds. Gayle is a general editor for the forthcoming Renovare Study Bible for Spiritual Formation and has coauthored with Diogenes Allen Longing for God: Seven Approaches to the Spiritual Life, both of which are scheduled to be published by HarperCollins in 2004.

ARTHUR ROBERTS is professor at large at George Fox University. He has served as editor of Quaker Religious Thought and is one of the leading interpreters of the history and doctrine of Friends in the world today. Author of more than a dozen books and more than one hundred essays and articles, Arthur prepared for publication (along with Hugh Barbour) Early Quaker Writings and (along with Dean Freiday) Barclay's Catechism and Confession of Faith. Arthur lives with his wife, Fern, in Yachats, on the Oregon Coast, and his most recent book, Exploring Heaven, will be published by HarperCollins this year.

CAROLE SPENCER teaches church history and spiritual formation at George Fox Evangelical Seminary and is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Birmingham (England), where she is completing a dissertation on Quakerism and Holiness. She is a recorded minister in Northwest Yearly Meeting of Friends and serves as clerk of the elders at Reedwood Friends Church in Portland, OR.

JOHN PUNSHON served as the first Leatherock Professor of Quaker Studies at the Earlham School of Religion from 1991 to 2002 and before that served as the Quaker Tutor at Woodbrooke College in England. He is author of Portrait in Grey, Testimony and Tradition, and Reasons for Hope: The Faith and Future of the Evangelical Friends Church. John Punshon is a recorded Friends minister in Indiana Yearly Meeting, and he is enjoying his retirement back in England, living with his wife, Veronica, in Milton Keynes, where they are active again among British Friends.

STEPHEN ANGELL is the Leatherock Professor of Quaker Studies at the Earlham School of Religion. A member of Tallahassee Friends Meeting of Southeastern Yearly Meeting, he is currently sojourning at the Oxford Friends Meeting of Ohio Valley Yearly Meeting. His research interests include such topics as educational theories and catechisms of seventeenth-century Friends, history of Friends’ missions in East Asia, and the religious thought of Howard Thurman.

COREY BEALS, a graduate of George Fox University, earned an M.A. in philosophical theology from Yale Divinity School, and is currently finishing a Ph.D. in philosophy at Fordham University in New York. His doctoral research is on the Jewish, postmodern philosopher Emmanuel Levinas, challenging Derrida’s deconstructive reduction of all authority to original violence and turning to Quaker practice as a paradigm. He has presented papers at the Annual Conferences of the Society of Christian Philosophers and has an article forthcoming in Teaching Philosophy entitled, “Finding Phronimos: Making a Place for Practical Wisdom in the Classroom.” Corey lives with his wife, Jill, and newborn son, Jonathan, in New Haven, Connecticut.

ROSEMARY MOORE discovered Friends when a student at Oxford University fifty years ago and has held various Quaker offices both locally and nationally. She followed her first degree in philosophy, politics and economics with a degree in theology from the University of London. She met her husband in a mountaineering club, and divided her working life between school teaching and raising two daughters. Having taken early retirement, she did a Ph.D. on early Quakers, which led to the publication of her book, The Light in Their Consciences. She is now working with Mel Keiser on a selected edition of Isaac Penington’s works, and her next project is a new edition of The Journal of the Life of Thomas Ellwood.

PAUL ANDERSON serves as chair of the Department of Religious Studies at George Fox University. He has received two teaching awards in the Templeton Science and Religion program and is a founding member of the “John, Jesus and History” Consultation at the national Society of Biblical Literature meetings. Paul assists with organizing the Quaker Theological Discussion Group meetings and lives with his family in Newberg, OR.

GEOFFREY CANTOR is professor of the history of science at the University of Leeds and has a long-standing interest in issues of science and religion. His publications include Michael Faraday: Sandemanian and Scientist (1991) and, with John Hedley Brooke, Reconstructing Nature: The Engagement of Science and Religion (1998). He is currently completing a comparative study of reactions to science by the Quaker and Anglo-Jewish communities.

GRACE JANTZEN is research professor of religion, culture and gender at the University of Manchester. She is the author of many books and articles, most recently Becoming Divine: Towards a Feminist Philosophy of Religion (MUP, 1998) and Power and Gender in Christian Mysticism (CUP 1995). She is currently at work on a multi-volume project entitled “Death and the Displacement of Beauty.” She is a member of Kendal and Sedbergh Monthly Meeting (in Cumbria, UK) and attends Kendal Preparative Meeting.

NANCEY MURPHY is professor of Christian philosophy at Fuller Theological Seminary. Her first book, Theology in the Age of Scientific Reasoning, won prizes from both the American Academy of Religion and the Templeton Foundation. She is also coauthor with George F.R. Ellis of On the Moral Nature of the Universe: Theology, Cosmology, and Ethics. Nacey is a member of the Board of Directors of the Center for Theology and the Natural Sciences and an ordained minister in the Church of the Brethren.
