CONTRIBUTORS

RONALD WORDEN is vice-president for academic affairs and professor of biblical studies at Houston Graduate School of Theology, which he has served from its beginning in 1983. He previously taught at George Fox College (now George Fox University), Western Evangelical Seminary (now George Fox Evangelical Seminary) and Friends Bible College (now Barclay College). He is a graduate of Friends Bible College, George Fox College and Asbury Theological Seminary with further degrees at Harvard Divinity School (Th.M.) and Princeton Theological Seminary (Ph.D.). He has published articles on various aspects of the interpretation of the Bible in the Evangelical Friend, Christianity Today, the Christian Century, and Quaker Religious Thought, and has served as secretary and president of the Council of Southwestern Theological Schools.

DEAN FREIDAY, longtime contributor to and former editor of QRT, is the editor of Robert Barclay’s Apology in Modern English. Along with Arthur Roberts, Dean edited Robert Barclay’s Catechism and Confession of Faith, just published by Barclay Press this year. Correcting the blurb of the last issue, Father Donald Nesti should be credited with founding Catholic and Quaker Studies, and yet Freiday has offered central leadership to its work and has also represented Friends on numerous ecumenical projects, nationally and internationally. Dean is an active member of Manasquan Meeting in Manasquan, New Jersey.

JULIET H. DODDS is a member of Tigard Community Friends Church of Northwest Yearly Meeting. She received her B.A. from George Fox University and her M.Div. from Earlham School of Religion, and she is working on her Ph.D. in biblical studies at Garrett Evangelical Theological Seminary. She currently resides in Evanston, Illinois, with her husband, Paul.

TIMOTHY SEID is the associate dean of distributed learning at Earlham School of Religion. Before coming to ESR, Tim was pastor of the Smith Neck Friends Meeting in South Dartmouth, Mass. He has a Ph.D. from Brown University in early Christianity and continues to publish in the area of his dissertation on the rhetorical features of the book of Hebrews.
MARY GARMAN teaches in the Religion Department of Earlham College and at the Earlham School of Religion. Her B.A. in theater arts and speech is from Kalamazoo College, her M.Min. is from the Earlham School of Religion, and her Ph.D. is from the joint program in religious studies from Garrett Evangelical Theological Seminary and Northwestern University. Her gifts of ministry were recorded by Western Yearly Meeting, where she served as a pastor for five years. Mary was co-editor (along with Judith Applegate, Margaret Benefiel and Dortha Meredith) of Hidden in Plain Sight: Quaker Women’s Writings, 1650-1700, and her current research interests are Quaker women and their friendships.

MICHAEL BIRKEL is professor of religion at Earlham College in Richmond, Indiana, where he teaches courses in Quakerism, church history, and biblical studies. His doctoral thesis at Harvard was on ancient Christian monasticism, and he has translated monastic texts from Greek and Latin. Michael has edited festschriften to honor Quaker scholars Hugh Barbour and Paul Lacey and has just completed a manuscript on John Woolman’s understanding of the inward life. He travels widely among Friends as a speaker and retreat leader, and it is said that his students call him the “cool Bible guy.”

HUGH PYPER is head of the School of Theology and Religious Studies and senior lecturer in biblical studies at the University of Leeds, England. A graduate of Edinburgh and Glasgow universities, he holds a Ph.D. from the University of Glasgow. He was assistant editor of the Oxford Companion to Christian Thought (Oxford: OUP 2000) and has contributed to several works on biblical interpretation and the writings of Kierkegaard. Hugh is a member of Carlton Hill Friends Meeting in Leeds.
