Hello all,

The new DUPEX Service has been going for about a month now. Thanks to all who have signed up and are sharing their lists regularly. I wanted to extend another invitation to those who'd like to join but haven't gotten around to signing up yet—it's never too late. And if you're one who's not sure what this Service is all about but think you might be interested, I extend an invitation for you to email me with your questions.

Let me also take this opportunity to tell you a few things about the Service that you might not know:

In order to send and/or receive lists of books, periodicals, and microfiche that are freely available for exchange among ACL members, you must be signed up for this Service. DUPEX lists will no longer be showing up on the ACL discussion list.

Emails from the Service are easy to recognize because of the designation [ACL DUPEX]. Also, the subject line should let you know what type of material is available for exchange on that particular email. This set up makes ascertaining which emails you're interested in looking at and which you'd like to delete easy to identify.

Third, it takes only a minute to sign up. You may send me an email at ramcguire@nwc.edu with the following information: name of institution, name of member of the Association, and name and email address of the person responsible for DUPEX at your institution. This person does not have to be a member of ACL, but there must be a current member at the institution. All those who join will be expected to follow the DUPEX Service Guidelines, which will be provided as part of the subscribing process.

If this Service can help you, I hope to hear from you soon.

Regards,

Ruth McGuire
