Daniel E. Bassuk is Professor of Religious Studies at the University of South Florida. He also teaches at St. Leo College. His doctoral dissertation was an analysis and critique of the mystical in Rufus Jones and Martin Buber. His major areas of specialization are archetypal psychology, Eastern religions, and sectarian religions. He is a member of Louisville, Ky., Meeting and attends Southeastern Yearly Meeting.

John Yungblut, a graduate of Harvard College, has studied theology at Harvard Divinity School and the Episcopal Divinity School. As an undergraduate at Harvard, he came under the influence of Rufus Jones, who encouraged him in what has become a lifelong study of the mystics. After four years as teachers at Pendle Hill, he and his wife June embarked last summer on self-employment as counselors, teachers, and leaders of Quiet Days. They have taken up residence at Lincoln, Va. John Yungblut is the author of two books: Rediscovering Prayer and Rediscovering the Christ.

J. Floyd Moore has been on the faculty of Guilford College since 1944. His present position there is Professor of Biblical Literature and Religious Studies. He has major teaching responsibilities in the areas of Quakerism, Christian ethics, and non-Western studies. He has served the Society of Friends at Ramallah, Palestine; on an AFSC team in Koblenz, West Germany; and at the Friends Center in Lynn, Mass. Floyd Moore has been very active in the work of the Friends World Committee for Consultation.

Lewis Benson is the author of Prophetic Quakerism and Catholic Quakerism. He is a member and recorded minister of Manasquan, N.J., Monthly Meeting. His concern for the re-establishment of prophetic Christianity, as George Fox understood, preached, and practiced it, has led to the formation of a "New Foundation" movement among Friends in North America and Great Britain. In 1977 Lewis Benson delivered the Nitobe Lecture at Japan Yearly Meeting.
