Hannon, I. (2020). Point of danger. Ada, MI: Revell. 378 pp. $16.99. ISBN 9780800736170

Point of Danger, the first of a new romantic thriller series written by Irene Hannon. The book follows Eve Reilly, a radio talk show host, who makes some enemies because of her show. Rookie police detective Brent Lange is the investigator tasked with keeping Eve safe while trying to learn who is targeting the talk show host. They form a deep connection early in the story that Brent Lange fights against believing himself incapable of love. Throughout the various dangerous situations, the couple find themselves in, however, Eve shows Brent that he is wrong about his feelings. The book is set in St. Louis, Missouri like most of Irene Hannon's books.

Both Eve and Brent are likeable characters and the reader gets to meet Eve's sisters who are interesting enough to feature as protagonists in their own books. These well-developed characters will endear themselves to any reader. The theme of this book is Eve standing up for what she believes in despite the danger surrounding her. This theme pertains to both her talk show content and her feelings for Brent. This suspenseful page-turner provides readers with a quick thrill ride without offending those with more sensitive inclinations. Irene Hannon is a talented author who excels at keeping her readers interested in the characters and the plot throughout the book. The culmination of the book however did feel somewhat forced and rushed with very little explanation. Nevertheless, this minor criticism does not take away from the enjoyment readers will have in the book. Point of Danger will make a fine addition to any Christian fiction collection that contains romantic thrillers.
