CONTRIBUTORS

PAUL ANDERSON is associate professor of biblical and Quaker studies at George Fox University. A graduate of Malone College and Earlham School of Religion, with a Ph.D. from the University of Glasgow, he served last year as a visiting professor of New Testament at Yale Divinity School. His New Testament essays and monograph on “The Christology of the Fourth Gospel” are widely respected within the international academic community. He is currently gathering the New Testament works of Henry J. Cadbury for publication. Paul assumes editorship of Quaker Religious Thought with the next issue.

HOWARD MACY, professor of biblical studies at George Fox University, chairs the Department of Religion. He previously taught at Friends University. A graduate of George Fox and Earlham School of Religion, with a Ph.D. from Harvard, he has given particular focus upon the Old Testament, and particularly upon the Psalms. His Rhythms of the Inner Life, a devotional study from the Psalms, has opened new vistas of spirituality to readers. Howard serves as clerk of the Quaker Theological Discussion Group.
